HEREDITY TRACED TO REMOTE ORIGIN

PARENTS NOT RESPONSIBLE

Professor in Lecture Declares Individual Characteristics Are Composite From Many Units

"As far as inheritance is concerned, the body is merely the carrier of the germ cells which are held in trust for coming generations. It is evident that the son who resembles his father cannot accurately be called 'a chip of the old block.' Rather, they are both chips off the same block." In discussing "Life under the Lens," Prof. C. E. Tharaldsen, of the zoology department of Northwestern University, re-emphasizes the theory that all human characteristics are primarily derived from and handed down by germ-cells of the human body and not by so-called body cells.

Parents not Responsible "Aside from bringing about the fusion of two distinct strains of germ plasma, father and mother are not responsible for endowing the child with its characteristics any more than the child can stamp its impress on the parents, but all three owe their characteristics to the germ cells from which they came," the Northwestern expert declared, and somewhat later this: "Experiment, as well as everyday operations, have taught us that the characteristics of the individual are a composite or a mosaic made up of a great number of separate units. We cannot but be impressed with the great diversity in physical and mental traits even among people of the same family. Some of them have black hair, others brown, yellow, flaxen, or red. The eyes may be blue, green or brown, etc. The unit of inheritance is therefore not the individual as a whole but any one of a great number of individual characters. These units may therefore be said to be heritable qualities of the individual which are transmitted as separate, independent units."

Experiments with Live Cells Dr. Tharaldsen referred at some length to the Mendelian theory of breeding and said it had been a valuable contribution to science. The Northwestern professor is at present experimenting under the lens upon live human cells. In doing this he utilizes an invention of his own which cuts living cells while held under the microscope. The results of his present research work may be announced some time next fall, it is stated.

NO UNEMPLOYMENT IN SIGHT, REPORT

Building Trades Promise Work For Months, According to Survey Report

Continuous employment for the rest of the year in the building trades, and plenty of work in agricultural occupations, are indicated, in a survey completed by Charles J. Boyd, general superintendent of the Illinois Free Employment Service. There is an increase of 88 per cent in the number of jobs available on farms, Mr. Boyd said, and while some slackening up can be expected in all lines of industry it will be mostly seasonal.

"Building permits," he asserted, "are only slightly under those of a year ago, but there are enough projects on hand in Chicago and vicinity to assure almost continuous employment for those engaged in this industry."

"There has not been much change in our ratio of applications to the number of jobs open. In March there were 157.8 applications for each 100 jobs and in February 150.8."

"The Chicago office registered 319 more persons for March than for February, while the opportunities for employment were 82 less, but the actual number of placements made was 417 greater."

"The March activity in building showed an increase of approximately 6 per cent in the number of jobs available, while the metal and machinery industry showed about one-third less. Common labor ran about 10 per cent below the previous month."

In the downstate regions, Mr. Boyd said, reports indicate about the same conditions as in Chicago, but he said he believed that as the season advanced and road building, street improvements and public work get well under way, they will take care of the present labor surplus and a great deal of what may be created by the slackening up of industries.
