FORMAL DEDICATION OF NEW AUDITORIUM

of illness was unable to be present and hear remarks of public approval of the beauty and fine utility of the building.

As one of the original promoters of the project of building a school and community auditorium, Mr. Jesse L. Smith was presented and given a very generous welcome. Mr. Smith talked of the various resources of the auditorium and of the use to which they are to be devoted.

Mayor Speaks
Mayor Hastings was presented to give the address of the evening and at the conclusion of what he had to say had the audience so enthusiastic over wiping out the building deficit that over five hundred dollars was pledged at the door as the crowd was filling out. The mayor congratulated Highland Park upon what he characterized as a very notable achievement and as distinctly upon the high level of which Highland Park is always capable. He announced the recent appointment of a city planner to study the various problems of our newly enlarged city and referred tactfully to the peculiar organization of educational systems within the boundaries of the city which results in each of School Districts 107, 108, 109, and 111 having separate jurisdiction over parts of the city. It was the mayor's wish that some day unity of all the educational systems be brought about.

Musical Features
The program began with the singing of five beautiful choruses by a group of 250 pupils including most of the pupils of the sixth, seventh, and eighth grades. These were easily assembled upon the commodious stage and with Miss Lund at the piano almost concealed by the mass of pupils they sang with a precision and unity of attack as if visibly directed, a feat for which Miss Lund was publicly congratulated. Professor George Tenney of Lewis Institute was presented to lead the community singing and after he had given a group of fine solos, he set the large audience to work in a delightful fashion, the words of the numbers sung being thrown upon the screen before the audience. The final number of the program revealed the fine equipment which is now an important resource of the building.

Two reels made in Highland Park six years ago showed the dramatization of a school of olden time and the Elm Place school of today as a type of the modern school. These pictures were received with great interest. A fascinating feature of the evening's spectacle was the employment of the varied lighting resources to produce artistic effects, particularly during the chorus work of the children. Practically all the lighting resources of the large commercial theaters have been included in the stage equipment at Elm Place.

COOLIDGE EXPOUNDS GOSPEL OF SERVICE TALKS TO U. S. EDITORS

Urges Country to Stick to Its Ideals to Insure Civilization Functioning in Good Order

President Coolidge, at the Associated Press luncheon in New York expounded the gospel of service which the American people have come to recognize as the ruling passion of his public and private life. This address had been forecast as in the nature of a political keynote. It differed much from the familiar political appeal, yet there can be no doubt that it will make a very strong appeal to the people.

It reveals the mind of President Coolidge, the depth and clarity of his thought on the foremost issues of the time; his grasp of the problems that confront America and the world and his will to tackle them with concern for nothing but the common welfare, declares the Pittsburg Gazette-Times. He stated a fundamental truth when he declared, "the danger of America is not in the direction of the failure to maintain its economic position, but in the direction of the failure to maintain its ideals."

Ideal of Service

The ideal of service, to which the President is committed, and to which he would commit the country, is something more than a mere willingness to be of help to the less fortunate. As Mr. Coolidge sees it, and as the people deep in their breasts know it to be, it is willingness and readiness to give disinterested, intelligent and efficient service.

He is prepared to add as much as possible in solving the problems of the world, evidence of which has already been given in many directions but in none so notably as in the recent participation of Americans in formulation of plans for settling that of reparations. But before we can go abroad as a "big brother" in which foreign peoples will have confidence we must put our house in order, establish domestic affairs on a substantial basis of right and justice and efficiency.

National legislation must be contrived for the benefit of the nation, not for the advantage of groups or blocs. This is elemental, but it is important for the President to declare his position on the subject that the people may be warned of the danger of being misled into another course and also that they may be assured that at Washington they have an executive who can be relied upon to labor with an eye single to the general good.

In point he mentioned the necessity of well-considered scientific methods of tax reduction. He believes this will be accomplished. It will be a Coolidge achievement very largely and make a solid basis for entrusting him with carrying to completion the platform of betterments to which he is committed.

First we must have a civilization functioning in good order. Then we may go forward in the sublime work of establishing the peace of justice which ever has been an American ideal. The President has his plans made for promoting this peace. He but awaits the settling down of the peoples to the important business of life, in which he urges Americans to assist by forwarding the success of the Dawes plan. Then he will summon their representatives to another arms limitation conference and support plans for establishing the reign of law in the place of that of force.

Advancement of the practical ideals of America by one who knows what those ideals are, is a fine purpose with which to go before the people as a presidential candidate. It accounts for the swelling popular demand for Coolidge.
