STRONG LEADERSHIP NEEDED

The San Francisco Bulletin has been running some excellent editorials on the necessity of getting back to first principles in our regard for and honor of the constitution of the United States and the fundamental principles which were recognized in establishing our democratic form of government.

In commenting on the recent action, or lack of action in Congress and its failure to exert itself along business rather than political lines, the Bulletin in a double column, black-face editorial, after citing numerous instances of the shortcomings of our national law-making body, says:

"At bottom, responsibility for the present disgraceful situation at Washington lies with Congress, whose hypocrisy, shirking and moral cowardice brought about conditions that made corruption inevitable."

It then cites numerous instances of radical, silly or freak legislation which Congress has passed to satisfy hysterical demands or dodge responsibility.

"A dozen boards and bureaus can be mentioned to which Congress has granted the high, middle and the low justice with respect to wide areas of activity and important industries.

"Citizens and business enterprises can be ruined by various of these boards and bureaus without ever having a day in court. As for ancient right of privacy, there is nothing left. Our telephones are tapped, our desks are rifled, our books searched, on orders from our departmental inquisitors. Few humans are fit to be trusted with the power which Congress so gaily delegates to the bureaucracy.

"Our form of government has changed under our eyes. We are governed not by statutes, but by rulings of this department and that commissioner whose orders have the force of laws. Our rights are determined for us not by courts and juries, who hear our cases in public, but by inspectors and investigators and bureaus who collect evidence where they find it and announce decision in true Turkish fashion. That, of course, is not democracy. It is not even efficient, but if it were, free government should not be sacrificed to efficiency.

"Only a Congress that will display some courage and statesmanship, and a little devotion to the constitution of the United States, will rid us of this pest of bureaucracy and restore the American ideal of popular government."

The Bulletin editorial is a strong statement of the case, but it will take strong leaders among our publishers and our public officials to save intact to the American people the liberties which were granted them in the formation of our government.

A DAY FOR REMEMBERING

No national holiday more closely touches the hearts of the American people than the one which is each year set apart in commemoration of the lives and deeds of those men who in our wars gave to the utmost limit of devotion in the defense of their country. In all the history of nations there is no parallel to this annual observance of a day sacred to the heroes who at the call of their country went forth to do and to die for liberty. Memorial day is peculiarly an American institution, and it is fitting that its observance be in the spirit in which it was established, in the spirit in which the men whose deeds it commemorates served their country in her times of great need.

Especially in this time—when a new era opening from the aftermath of the last and greatest of our wars has ruffled the smooth current of world progress by storms of dissension that seek to wrench from their moorings the old, stable beliefs and set them adrift into an uncharted sea of doubt and distrust—there should be a revival of the old spirit, a renewal of allegiance to the old flag and a reconsecration to the faith that was manifested by the men who stood in the breach in the crises of our national history and held high the torch of patriotism in the darkest day of national emergency.

The American people do not forget. They can not forget on Memorial day the heroism and the sacrifice that saved the union in Civil war days, the idealism that led American soldiers and sailors to fight for the freedom of Cuba in 1898, the flaming patriotism that sent millions of our young men across the seas in the greatest crusade of the ages during the world war. The faith of the fathers is still the faith of the majority of their descendants, and when on Memorial day Americans gather about the shrines of patriotism and recall the glorious deeds of the heroes of those stirring times, they can be depended on to be ready there to grasp the torch of freedom from the hands of the past, to carry on when their country calls.

Americans have in them yet the stuff that heroes are made of. In their hands the flag is still upheld; for them there is still inspiration on this Memorial day in recalling the glorious history of their land. They believe that it is a land worth living for and working for and fighting for to the end that this flag and this freedom may be handed down to the coming generation the same priceless heritage left to us by the heroes of the past.

of the lake. The prospect is unquestionably fine. One lady said to another yesterday, "It would take the eyes out of your head to look at it," and her companion gave vent to her enthusiasm in a genuine "Oh, my!" Nothing could be more eloquent. The lake stretched away, a sheet of blue merging into the sky on the eastern horizon. In the distance lay Lake Forest and Waukegan, and near by the cupolas of the residences peeped above the thick foliage surrounding them. The hotel has 100 rooms, and, of course, a bridal chamber gorgeously furnished. The house exhibited taste and elegance in all its appointments. It cost $85,000.

Some of the visitors drove around the place over rustic bridges, under trees, beside ravines of moderate though not frightful depth, by the lake and around the growing town admiring the beauty of the surroundings and surprised at what Nature supplemented by art accomplished in a few short years. Among the most elegant residences built and occupied by Chicagoans are those of J. W. Preston, President of the Board of Trade; C. R. Field, W. W. Boyington, who has expended much architectural ability in the production of a gem of a house; the Rev. Dr. Evaris, who has a neat brick dwelling near by; F. P. Hawkins, Frederick Fisher, Volney E. Roscoe, E. H. Plummer, Jonas Steers, Jacob S. Curtis, James M. Smith, S. B. Williams, T. R. Willard, Col. W. A. James, Thomas H. Spencer, F. D. French, Elsie Gray, Thomas H. Beebe, John W. Middleton, all of whom own buildings of some elegance. Of course there are many others whose dwellings are of more or less pretension, but this is not a directory of Highland Park.

A second train arrived in the evening, conveying another load of guests. Among those invited were Gen. Sheridan Norton, Miss Jessie Gage, Jesse O. Hilton, Miss Hilton, George Land and family, Timothy Wright and family, H. B. Hurd, Miss Hurd, Edwin Hawkins, the Misses Duffield, Miss Morehead, Pittsburgh, the Misses Carter, H. M. Smith and family, Marvin Hughitt, W. A. Thrall, Judge Fuller and family, John H. Wren, Charles A. Dupee, J. V. Clarke, B. Loewenthal, Judge

Blodgett, Irving Pearce, J. B. Parsons, Philip Wadsworth, the Rev. Dr. Luther Stone, J. M. Harvey, Senator Upton, C. B. Farwell, J. D. Ward, R. E. Goodell, D. R. Holt, William Warren, Samuel Barnum, C. L. Canfield, Dr. C. H. Quinlan, ex-Senator Artemas Carter, L. J. Gage, and a few hundred others.

In the evening there was a hop—an old-fashioned one, with more of fun and frolic and genuine enjoyment than was ever found in a conventional ball-room. The hot weather had abdicated in favor of good dancing-weather—breezy and cool. The ladies were charming, as they generally are, attired in light summer costumes. The gentlemen were charming, too, as they sometimes are. Both ladies and gentlemen kept time to the music of the Great Western Light Guard Band until they were tired or hungry, and then they hid away to the supper-room, where lemonade, ice cream, and other delicacies were served, under the supervision of Mr. Hopkins, the manager of the institution. Some of the dancing was performed on the "quarter-deck," 160 feet above the level of the lake, which by the by, glistened in the moonlight for the inspiration of young people, of sentiment. They said it was "just splendid"—a very admirable exhibition of moonlight.

At midnight the special train returned to town with those who desired to come, but dancing was continued into the "wee short hours about the twal," and, when all was over, it was the end of an eventful day in the history of the beautiful and pleasant suburb, Highland Park.
