PUBLIC SERVICE CO. WINS COFFIN AWARD

FOR GREAT ACHIEVEMENTS

Gold Medal, Certificate and $1,000 in Cash Given at Convention Held Recently

A gold medal and an embossed sheepskin certificate—visible proofs of another reason why northern Illinois may rightfully boast of being the greatest place in the world—have been received at the general offices of the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois, at Chicago.

They are the Charles A. Coffin awards, given the Public Service company, winner in a competition with all the other electric light and power companies of America, as the company making the greatest achievement in the electrical field of the nation during 1923. With them came a check for $1,000, the cash award, which is to be added to the Employers' Benefit association.

Description
The medal, of 14 carat gold and more than three inches in diameter, bears on the reverse side the profile of Charles A. Coffin, founder of the General Electric company. In commemoration of his work his company established the Coffin Foundation and confers the annual award.

On the reverse side of the medal is the inscription, "For distinguished contribution to the development of electric light and power for the convenience of the public and the benefit of the industry, awarded to the Public Service company of Northern Illinois, 1923."

The Certificate
The sheepskin certificate reads, "The Charles A. Coffin Foundation, established by the General Electric company, for the advancement of the electrical art, awards the Charles A. Coffin medal to the Public Service company of Northern Illinois in recognition of its distinguished contribution during the year 1923 to the development of electric light and power for the convenience of the public and the benefit of the industry."

Formal conferring of the medal and award was made recently at the national convention of the National Electric Light association by its president, on behalf of the prize committee.

Possibly some folks about now would need a vacation more if they had not been taking one right along through the year.
