No Car Like It!

42 horsepower! 50 miles and more an hour—hour after hour—without over-heating—without loss of power—without carbon cleaning!

And at the end of a long sustained high speed, your motor will be cooler, will need less water than any similar sized poppet-valve engine.

This engine's power curve keeps climbing up while the power of a poppet-valve car is dropping off. Furthermore, the Willys-Knight is entirely free from those engine repairs which make up 50% of the upkeep cost of practically all poppet-valve cars. It has no cams—no springs—to get out of order. A car you can keep season after season. Take a ride today.

PAINTINGS DEPICT PRIMITIVE MAN

INTERESTING ART WORK

Mural Decorations Completed By Institute Instructor Portray Periods Of Development

Primitive man and his ways of living will be shown in some of the very interesting mural paintings which have just been completed by John W. Norton, instructor in the Art Institute school. Five of these paintings will be placed on exhibition at the Art Institute July 10. A series of twelve large murals, showing the figures, nearly life size, is being painted by Mr. Morton for the Frank G. Logan Archaelogical museum at Beloit, Wisconsin.

Mr. Morton has devoted much time to research work in connection with the racial characteristics of early man, and his interpretation is especially interesting because he approaches the problem from the standpoint of a trained artist. The composition, the color, and the design in each of his murals have a strong appeal to the aesthetic and at the same time the dramatic features which make up the action of the picture is vivid and realistic.

Dramatic Action

In the painting of the first men crossing the upper reaches of the Pacific when they ventured from Asia to Alaska in a mere dugout canoe, the action is dramatic in the extreme. There are only four figures indicated, three magnificent specimens of well-muscled manhood and a woman whose strong back is partially shown as the heavy fur falls from one shoulder. She evidently is nursing a child whose raven black hair is half visible The leader stands erect in the canoe shouting a command, as his arm stretches forward, probably toward the strange new land which they are approaching for the first time in history. The two oarsmen with paddles sunk deep into the water, are intent on their tasks. The painting of these two rowers and of the woman is strong and masterly.

Primitive Life

The group at the camp-fire, where one of the men of the Neanderthal type is building a fire with flints, is a striking picture of primitive life. A woman with a babe resting on one arm, stands stirring the fire, while one of the men holds something over the blaze. A third man stands erect leaning on his staff. The features of all are heavy and stolid, with foreheads retreating, hair coarse and black, eyes small and furtive, and yet they are imbued with that intelligence which made them even at that early date masters of all living things.

A third painting entitled "The Lake Dwellers," shows a village on one of the lakes in Switzerland, where recently the remains of such dwellings have been discovered by archaeologists. This is a peaceful and domestic scene, delightful to the eye, filled with the charm of friendly discourse and neighborly barter and trade. A dwelling is represented thatched roof, resting on piles driven into the lake, which was the method devised for protection. A platform or porch is made of poles. On this are a number of figures, a woman weaving, a boy with a wolf-dog, a girl receiving a basket of fruit from traders in a canoe, a child leaning languidly on the railing, and three men, one with a spear, in earnest converse. In the distance a man is seen tending domesticated animals and in the background arises the picturesque snow-clad peaks of the Alps.

Before Man

Another of Mr. Morton's conceptions is entitled "Before Man" and is a scene showing the jungle when the sabre-tooth tiger reigned supreme. Another shows the Algonquin Indians in America, and still another on which he is now working represents the Incas of Peru. The whole series of twelve, it is expected, will be ready by January 1.

AMPLIFIERS CARRY KING'S VOICE FAR

Phone Device Enables England's Monarch To Address Over 100,000 People

With fanfare of trumpets and all the medieval pomp and circumstance with which Merry England is wont to greet its royal family on state occasions, the British Empire exhibition was recently opened at Wembley, England, by the king.

An unusual touch of modernity was added to this occasion by the scientific achievement of present day telephone engineers. His majesty's utterances were heard by a vast audience of more than 100,000 loyal subjects gathered in and about the great concrete stadium by means of the public address system, developed by the engineers of the Bell System, and installed by the Western Electric company.

A demonstration of the efficiency of the public address apparatus on a large scale was first made in this country when on Inauguration Day, March 4, 1921, President Harding delivered his Inaugural address and was heard clearly by a vast assemblage, estimated at more than 125,000.
