SENTENCE SERMONS

By the Rev. Roy L. Smith

An old friend—

—Is usually worth more than ten new ones.

—Is one who has learned to be charitable of our faults.

—Must be skilled in the art of forgetting.

—Is one who believes in us, whether we explain ourselves or not.

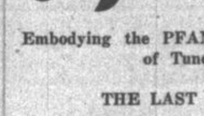
—Is like an old shoe: adjusted to our peculiarities.

—Is always worth more than he costs.

—Never keeps a ledger account of his friendliness.

The taxpayers who claim they are not getting their money's worth, are often the same ones who can't stop to read what public officials are doing.

The younger generation do not like to go to bed at night, but they are willing to make up for that by sleeping later in the morning.



Don't Wait Until

you break your glasses to have your eyes examined. Just as soon as you feel your eyes are not as comfortable as they used to be, or that your vision is not as good as formerly—that is the time to act.

Glasses that were correct for your eyes a year or two ago may be causing strain today. Your glasses have not changed in that time, but your eyes have.

Interpretative Shakespeare

"Halloo Your Name to the Reverberate Hills"

Word-of-mouth advertising, Shakespeare advises. In effect, he says:

Satisfy your trade with good merchandise—
honest prices—
prompt service—
grateful thanks—

and your customers will "halloo your name to the reverberate hills."

We would like our friends to "halloo" to the mis-spenders,

That if they buy things at this store their dollar bills will get them more.
