FARMER DOES NOT WANT TO BE BABIED

IDEA OF NEW SECRETARY

Jardine Says Agriculture Able to Stand on Own Feet and Its Hope is in Improving Marketing

The farmer is not a ward of the government and doesn't want the government constantly monkeying with closed. his business, according to a statement issued by Secretary of Agriculture Jardine to the United States Chamber of Commerce.

"The farmer doesn't want to be pitied or babied by other people," Mr. Jardine asserts. "What the farmer wants is just this: He wants his business to have an equal opportunity lation to fix prices or regulate de- Bond of $1,000. Appraisers appointtails. Mr. Jardine said that the farmer's way out is not by curtailing production but by increasing it to a point where he can make money. He characterized the talk of curtailing production as "loose talk," and said that proved. Sale of chattel property aueven if this were practicable it would thorized. not get the farmers anywhere.

The Secretary of Agriculture pointed out that there are now 5,000 cooperative grain marketing associations. the United States, and about the same number of co-operative livestock shipping associations, and he declared that if it were applied in the proper proved manner co-operation could make of the farming industry in America "a big voluntarily unified, permanently and dependably profitable business in a way that no paternalistic legislation could possibly do."

In conclusion, Mr. Jarmine says: What we all need to do is to talk less tommyrot and throw fewer monkey wrenches into other people's machinery. We want to stop trying to line up one group against other groups. We want to work together. Americans should be co-operating, not quarreling with each other over the dentals interests of this group or that."

Secretary Jardine's statement which is his first public utterance since he became identified with the president's cabinet, will appear in the April issue of "The Nation's Business," the official organ of the Chamber of Commerce.

"TOM SHOWS" IN GOOD OLD TIMES

Writer Describes Some of The Beaubien. Bond of $7,000. Features of Famous Play Of Abolition

Just at a time when people were forgetting about "Uncle Tom's Cabin," Or, At Least, Author Thought so a New York company revived it and attracted much attention. There is now a musical comedy based upon Mrs. Stowe's classic. But most people remember it as a melodrama presented perhaps under a tent or in the town hall.

J. Frank Davis, author and dramatic critic, is in the field for the amateur attendance record at these performances. He modestly claims only the New England record in an article on "Tom Shows" in the April Scribner's Magazine, but doubts that his mark of 25 has ever been equalled. Speaking of the vogue of this play he says: "In America today are vast numbers of middle-aged men women who remember that 'Uncle Tom' was the first theatrical performance they ever saw. Also second, third, and fourth, very likely unless 'Ten Nights in a Barroom' also happened to come to that town. was one of those. Until I was thirty years old I never saw a professional company of actors in anything but "Tom'-but I had seen that sterling production five or six times.

"Each time with a new excitement, too, a thrill such as never will be known by the modern sophisticated infant who comes home from the feature picture to remark that Jackie Coogan wasn't half bad.

"...o statistician has the figures of how many times 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' first performance in 1852. If they could be assembled, the result would probably, has ever had half so many productions. #### NEEDED RUNAWAY TO FINISH STORY suggests another danger to which the novelist and the writer of short stories are equally exposed," writes Edith Wharton in "Telling a Short Story" in the April Scribner's Magazine. "Such economy is, in both cases, neary always to be advised in the multiplication of accidental happenings, minor episodes, surprises and contrarieties. Most beginners crowd into their work twice as much material of this sort as it needs. The reluctance to look deeply enough into a subject leads to the indolent habit of decorating its surface. I was once asked to read a manuscript on the eternal theme of a lovers' quarrel. The quarrelling pair made up, and the reasons for dispute and reconciliation were clearly inherent in their characters and situation; but the author, being new at the trade, felt obliged to cast about for an additional, a fortuitous, pretext for their reunion-so he sent them for a drive, made the horses run away, and caused the young man to save the young lady's life. This is a crude example of a frequent fault. Again and again the novelist passes by the real meaning of a situation simply for lack of letting it reveal all its potentialities instead of dashing this way and that in quest of fresh has been played in America since its effects. If, when once drawn to a subject, he would let it grow slowly in his mind instead of hunting about be staggering. No play in the world, for arbitrary combinations of circumstances, his tale would have the warm scent and flavor of a fruit ripened in the sun instead of the insipidity of one forced in a hot-house."

And Spoiled Natural Sequence

"The phrase 'economy of material'

It is stated that the gunfire on
