GOOD-WILL AND CO-OPERATION

None of the great problems of our day will ever be rightly solved unless we first obtain an understanding of intelligent self-interest, and establish and maintain the spirit of co-operation and the sense of neighborly service among the communities and groups concerned. Nor will they be solved without painstaking analysis of the facts and forces, and of the experiences we have already gained, nor unless they are met by men with open minds willing to hammer every proposal on the anvil of sincere debate unmixing with debasing alloys of malice and selfishness. We lose always by bitterness and denunciation. We need good-will as much in solution of our great internal problems as we need it in our foreign relations. If we are to keep this civilization of ours on an even keel and steer it to its glorious purpose of economic security and progress, if we are to sustain democracy, if we are to maintain an equality of opportunity, it must be directed by the good-will of good neighbors, declared Secretary Hoover in a recent address.

Nor will solutions be found in economic patent medicines of government action. We cannot cure foolishness by legislation. We cannot catch economic forces with bureaucracy. Yet we can influence economic forces by co-operation in the community. The national and local governments must cure abuse and fraud, and they can act as umpires. They can do many other things. But, above all, they can best serve the community by bringing about co-operation in the large sense between groups. It is the failure of groups to respond to their responsibilities to others that drives government more and more into the lives of our people. And every time government is forced to act, we lose something in self-reliance, character, and initiative. Every time we find solution outside of government we have, not only strengthened character but we have preserved our sense of real self government.

THEY BUILT WELL

Our fathers and grandfathers met problems, as difficult as those which face us, when they trekked their families to this state in the covered wagon. They broke the prairie, they built their homes up from the sod house. They built the roads, the bridges, the highways and the towns. They erected the schools and colleges. They combined to fight the Indians. They worked together to harvest their fields, to raise their barns. They cooperated to build themselves a government without paternal nursing from without. They were men of indomitable courage and self-reliance, rugged of character, reverent toward God.

They and their fathers gave a genius to American institutions which distinguished our people from that of any other in the world—the demand for an equal opportunity—the demand for a fair chance as the basis of American life. They sought to secure a diffusion of the great resources of America to all who would work. In this way they created for us a social system of our own. They made it from materials brought in revolt from Europe. We have lived in it; we seldom try to define it. It was not the spirit or purpose of this social system to create privilege or support the idle, whether it be the idle rich or the idle bum. We may not find the perfect attainment of this ideal, but we have come nearer to it than any other people. And we may lose some of it in the industrial transformation unless we direct that transformation rightly.
