FOLEY WINS TOURNEY AT LOCAL GOLF CLUB

Defeats Lloyd Larson In Final Match; Hart Takes Second Flight

Henry Foley won the Highland Park open title by beating Lloyd Larson 12 up and 11. Larson never had a chance against the superior golfer that Foley shot. Foley shot nearly par golf and was never in trouble. During the whole tournament Foley never went above a 76.

To reach the finals he beat Art McCaffrey, P. Carani and Swede Olson. Foley deserves the title as he shot good steady golf. For winning Foley is awarded the Cushing cup.

In the second flight Martin Hart beat S. Sobey 4 up and 3. Hart had the best of it all the way.

Jim Collins won third flight by defeating Todd 3 up and 2.

The tournament was successfully run off by Professional Kelly and his assistant Joe McClory.

Club Championship Next
Next Sunday the club championship qualifying round will be played. Only club members are eligible to play. There will be three flights. Last year's winner of the 1st flight, Charlie Carey, will be on hand to defend his title. Foley will attempt to win this title also.

Others who have a chance and should easily qualify are Swede Olson, Nafey and Lloyd Larson, N. Gemmer, McCaffrey, Carani and Fred Johnson. Richard (Dickie) Martin just joined the club so that he would be able to play in this tournament and with the brand of golf that he shoots he should be the winner.

The new course will be open in two weeks. Names for the holes suggested by those who are competing in the contest should be in the hands of Secretary Crawford or Professional Kelly before Sept. 1.

Are You Chasing Rainbows?

Like a rainbow which soon disappears, the get-rich-quick investment proves to be only a beautiful "vision."

Though it fades, the rainbow leaves behind it happy thoughts of its resplendent grandeur. The "get-rich-quick" investment leaves behind it only disappointment and remorse.

Chasing rainbows can do you no harm, but chasing "wild cat" investments can ruin you financially.

Stop chasing either and consult your banker before making investments. He knows the facts.

MISS WHITE

An Appreciation

They say that she is dead,
But wait! how can that be
When all her joyous life
Was given to you and me?
Her radiant smile, her welcome sweet
Her gentle guidance of little feet,
Her patient toil, her generous praise
Through long school hours and holidays;
She freely gave herself away
Her very soul; and who may say
That gift was vain?
We mourn because she's gone.
But stay! She loved not tears,
Her cheer dispelled all gloom,
Her courage scattered fears!
If in those hours of care and work
We failed her, or in our task did shirk
And caused her pain! Ah me! We should
Weep hard as only the contrite could
But if our love smoothed out her way
Or added sunshine to her day
'Tis not to grieve.

They tell me she is dead.
But look! Young faces show
Her zeal, her strength, her character,
She lives, we know
In word, in deed, in thought, in song
We children carry her life along;
Some, hisping still, some stalwart grown
But all are bearing her banner on;
And every time a child, with might,
Stands up for what she taught was right,
She lives again!
Mrs. Rex L. Jones.

STREET LIGHTS ARE A STOP TO CRIME

Adequately lighted streets constitute the greatest single detriment to crime, according to R. J. Malcolmson, street lighting engineer of the Public Service company of Northern Illinois, in a recently published handbook on street lighting.

"It has been said that the one street lamp is worth ten policemen," the handbook says. "It is evident that the elimination of the undesirable conditions of dangerous, dimly lighted streets, is of inestimable value. In one town crime committed in a newly lighted district decreased nine per cent."

Proper street lighting as a reducer of accidents also is discussed in the handbook. It estimates the lack of adequate light as responsible for 54 million dollars of accident damage annually.

The handbook shows that a recent investigation of municipal financing disclosed the rather startling fact that while 21 cents of each dollar is street lighting today than they paid twenty years ago.

The handbook traces the development of municipal lighting from 200 A. D., when lamps burning animal fat were hung before the homes of prominent Romans, until the present time. Vessels filled with tallow lighted the street intersections of Paris in 1558 to be followed in 1745 by oil lanterns. The discovery of gas turned attention to it as a medium of light. Baltimore was the first American city to be lighted with gas in 1817.

Electric arc lamps were introduced in 1879 and improvements in street lighting since that time have been rapid. Today we have the gas filled Mazda lamp. Invention of the latter marked the beginning of modern street lighting on a scientifically defined plan and made it possible to combine in a street lighting system both utility and decoration. Such systems have been installed in many northern Illinois towns.

In conclusion the handbook declares good street lighting is an indication of prosperity; that it creates an impression of thrift and progress and returns large dividends to taxpayers in advanced real estate values.
