

BUY YOUR HOMESITE IN RAVINIA TERRACE

"On Liberal Terms"

Here, in the North Shore's most beautiful suburb, there still remains a most beautiful tract of rolling land offering the home seeker every conceivable advantage of location, natural beauty and great potential value. This tract has been divided into just 48 large homesites. It is east of Green Bay Road, 80 feet above the Lake and affords a most wonderful view of the Skokie sunsets. You probably have seen this property a dozen times and remarked to yourself what an ideal homesite it would be.

Now you are offered an opportunity to purchase one of the 48 large homesites at a cost remarkably low.

THE LAST AVAILABLE NORTH SHORE TRACT

For ten years far-sighted subdividers have been trying to purchase this property and thereby offer it to the public.

Now, when it is the only desirable and available tract of its kind in this vicinity, it is offered to the public. Sidewalks, sewer and water are already in; to be paved next year.

Consider the advantages of location — only three blocks to express trains, both the Electric and the Northwestern Railroad, 3 1/2 blocks to the school, and 5 short blocks to the lake.

This will, undoubtedly, be your last opportunity to purchase a north shore homesite of such desirability at anywhere near this price.

INTERESTING POINTS OF ART PUBLICATION

HANDBOOK OF PAINTINGS

Booklet Issued by Art Institute
Shows Various Periods of Artistic Development In U. S.

The new handbook of paintings issued by the Art Institute contains 172 pages, with 109 illustrations showing many of the most important paintings in the Museum. The handbook is divided into chapters or sections, devoted to the art of each important country, beginning with Italy and taking up in turn Dutch and Flemish art, German, British, French, Spanish and American. It will be found an invaluable help to any one interested in painting, as the book contains a great deal of information to any one interested in painting, as the book contains a great deal of information collected with infinite pains, and there is, prefacing the section devoted to each country, a short introductory note covering the development of painting in that particular country. Speaking of America, we find the following:

Colonial Period
"The Colonial period in America was not conducive to the establishment of an artistic tradition. Life was a matter of stern reality and there was little time for the cultivation of art. Such men as essayed an artistic career, as avocation rather than vocation, generally took for their models the English portrait painters. Art for art's sake was not understood or greatly desired, and portraits were ordered to gratify the vanity of wealthy men, or to preserve the features of distinguished ones.
"During and immediately following the war of Independence, political developments were uppermost in the minds of most Americans — and young painters executed grandiose battles and portraits of the nation's heroes. At the conclusion of peace, leisure and contemplation became possible, and the growth of a national spirit led to a greater pride in national art. The British influence, however, continued to dominate.
Breaks With Tradition
"The Hudson river school represented the first break with tradition and an attempt to found an American art, but although it helped to train landscape artists like Wyant and Inness, there was not substance enough in its teaching or its achievement, and the young men had to turn elsewhere.

"In the nineteenth century a more cosmopolitan trend appeared; the United States was becoming less isolated, a power in world affairs, and new vistas opened up. English art had fallen into sentimentality and weariness; now Germany, where the romantic and literary tradition prevailed, attracted many young painters. The most powerful outside influence upon American art in the last century, as upon art everywhere, has been French. The Barbizon school aimed at the truth in nature and for them this meant the truth of their own personal vision, unhampered by the classical or conventional point of view.

"George Inness found their teachings more helpful than those of the Hudson River school, and both he and William Morris Hunt carried the philosophy of the Barbizon School back to America. All of these influences have been and are still at work in American painting, and the result is a complexity of forces, of which few may yet be said to be authentically American."

ENGLISH, SCOTCH LIKE GRAPEFRUIT American Product Makes Hit In British Isles; Dealers Seek Stocks

American grapefruit has so pleased English and Scotch palates that the neighborhood grocers have laid in stocks to meet the city and suburban demands, reports Edwin Smith, foreign representative of the United States Department of Agriculture. Only fancy fruiterers in the better shopping districts stocked grapefruit three years ago, he explains. London is the center of distribution for Europe, but direct shipments have been made to Liverpool and to Glasgow.

If the American grapefruit industry could arrange for a special advertising fund, Mr. Smith believes, the Fruit Trades Federation of England could effectively administer the money toward increasing grapefruit consumption. American distributors could reach the entire retail trade, he suggests, because of the Federation's close co-operation with retailers — a profitable way, perhaps, to put British taste to the acid test. The schools in many places are overcrowded, but many of the kids would no doubt consent to remain away in order to save space.

Formerly they always used to have playgrounds around schoolhouses, but before long automobile parking yards may be more necessary.

FOSSIL REMAINS BEING EXCAVATED

IN DIFFERENT COUNTRIES

Remote Valleys and Mountains
Being Explored by Daring Seekers After Ancient Relics of Mankind

At the present time the world is deeply interested in the work of excavating for fossil remains which numerous groups of scholars and scientists are undertaking in various parts of Europe, Asia, and North and South America.

It will be remembered that some time ago a young professor from Beloit college created a sensation by inducing an archaeologist of France to part with what is pronounced to be the oldest necklace in the world, and in sending it to Mr. Frank G. Logan, vice-president of the Art Institute, whose prompt cable of the necessary funds made the purchase possible. Mr. Logan then presented it to the Beloit Museum where it now is, the envy of all other museums. Young Alonzo Pond is again in France, just about to embark on an expedition of remarkable interest, from which great things are expected. He is in touch with Count de Prorok who is making a survey of the Sahara Desert, looking for historic remains. His best known project is Carthage and Submarine City. Mr. Pond writes, in a letter just received in Chicago by Mr. Logan, as follows:

Exploring Unknown
"We will be with Count de Prorok for six weeks, two of which will be making excursions from Tamanrasset and exploring valleys hitherto unknown to civilized white men. Incidentally it will include a mountain climbing event in which we will attempt to climb the highest mountain in the Sahara, so far an unaccomplished feat. Regular dispatches are to be sent back by wireless to the New York Times as per his contract with them during that time.
"It is understood that such dispatches shall include Logan Museum of Beloit College, as it does the names of one or two other institutions also co-operating with the Count.
"After the first six weeks, Reygasse and I leave the Count and with our own camels strike out into the absolutely unknown desert, that is the blank space on the National Geographic Map of Africa, then we shall send back mail and dispatches to de Prorok which will be forwarded by him, wireless or auto as we direct. This will be called the Logan Sahara

Expedition of Beloit College. De Prorok tells me that Reygasse is the only man in the world who has reliable information on that part of the desert and he won't tell where he got it, but as he knows all the shieks (headmen) he has probably collected it over a long period of time.

Rich in Relics
"The region you are going into," said the Count, "is so much richer than anything else in the world as regards prehistoric remains that it is absolutely beyond the range of imagination. The Dordogne of France isn't in it in comparison. There is little doubt that you will be attacked, certainly if you have any luck at all you will be. There are caves and rock shelters. There are carvings on the walls and flint implements by the hundreds of thousands. Yes, there is one station where they have found Mousterian culture in place with animal remains in such good preservation that there is no doubt in my mind that some day, when we can spend the time there to dig thoroughly we will find human remains. I am sure of it."

FUNDING OF DEBTS MAY NOT CUT TAXES

The people of the nation must not get the idea that if all the foreign countries funded their debts on practically the same basis of terms given to England all taxes in the United States would be deeply cut, for if all of them were to pay this country in the proportion that they do the total receipts would be about four hundred and fifty million dollars a year. This, of course, would include England's one hundred and sixty-two million dollars a year that she is paying us now. It is true, however, that if these debts were funded and the interest promptly paid, they would aid in our national debt total, thereby reducing the interest that must be paid each year on the national debt.

Real tax reduction must come from a continuation of the President's policy of governmental economy.

PHONE DIRECTORIES IN CHICAGO HUGE

The telephone directories published by the Illinois Bell Telephone Company in Chicago alone during 1924 used 2,823,004 pounds of paper. If these directories were piled one on top of another, they would reach a height of more than three times the combined altitudes of Mt. Everest, Peak, Mt. Hood, and King's Peak, or 68 miles. If the books were placed end to end they would reach from Chicago to a point near St. Louis.

The politicians deny that they are the friends of the rich, except about the time when they need campaign funds.

Considering the carelessness of many hunters, they should be required to practice for some years in the back yard with a broomstick before getting a license.

The history students may not see any use in learning all these dates, when they are making more interesting ones all the time.
