

GOOD EYESIGHT IS THE JOY OF LIVING
Work of Illinois Society for Prevention of Blindness Helps Overcome Defects

The bright eyed infant in the cut is one of hundreds who enjoy good eyesight today because of the services of the Illinois Society for the Prevention of Blindness. The activities of this society are largely devoted to the protection of the eyes in infants and the examination and correction of eye defects in school children. It is from the unnecessary blindness in infants and children of school age that over one-half of the present blindness in this country has been recruited—this is an appalling and tragic fact, since there are at present over one hundred thousand blind in this country, such a fact constitutes a challenge to an age which emphasizes the possibility of preventive measures and which gives much attention to child welfare activities. The record of this society in the ten years of its service demonstrates that preventive medicine is effective in greatly reducing the amount of unnecessary blindness to infants and in conserving good eyesight in school children by early attention to defects and to serious eye ailments. One of the measures established for conservation of sight in school children with unimprovable eye defects is the Sight Saving class in the schools where visual defects are no bar to regular educational work because all the facilities of the school room are adapted to relief from eye strain—that Chicago has established fourteen of these classes in a variety of school buildings within the last three years is an evidence of the practical value of special courses for all children with visual handicaps. Blindness and serious visual defects need not be experienced in order to make its appeal to the average human—it is among the most limiting of the physical handicaps since it entails life-long dependence, and means deprivation of many of the things in life which seem so essential to comfort. One moment of comparison between the dark trail of blindness and the joyous freedom of good sight will bring grateful appreciation of good vision. We are invited to give this moment of thoughtful comparison and then out of our gratitude for sight to make our contribution to a service which this society may render for us to some one whose possession of good eyesight may even now be threatened.
