Garden Club Meets
The Garden club met at the home of Mrs. C. W. Boyle on Springfield avenue, Wednesday, April 21. The day proved to be most enticing and a large number attended.

Various committees reported. The membership committee presented the name of Mrs. Williams of Second street for membership. She was unanimously elected to membership in the club.

The chairman of the program committee gave out dahlia-flowered zinnia seeds which are to be planted May fifteenth. Every member is expected to exhibit at the summer flower show and the grower of the most successful zinnias will be awarded a prize. Beautiful ribbons were donated by Mrs. Geary to be awarded to the other prize-winning flowers at the exhibit.

After the business meeting, Mrs. Geary read a most delightful paper on "Rock Gardens". She had a number of pictures to illustrate points. One is apt to think of rockery as a pile of rocks which is rather a stiff garden but Mrs. Geary told of various ways the rock garden could be used to advantage such as in place of a terrace and along a path. There are numerous flowers which grow successfully. At the conclusion of the paper, tea was served.

The Garden club will have a bakery sale Saturday, May 1, from two until five o'clock in the store vacated by the bakery. It is being given by the civic committee and the proceeds will be used in furthering the work of that committee. Some of the money will be used to buy prizes to be awarded to the school children who will exhibit their flowers at the summer flower show.

The day is Saturday, the date is May 1, and the time, two until five o'clock.

Daughters of the American Revolution
Mrs. E. R. Phelps, Regent of the North Shore Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, described the traditions, aims and purposes of the D. A. R. to the pupils of the Deerfield school, Thursday afternoon when members of the chapter assembled on the lawn of the school, at the foot of the flag staff, upon which arose as described the nineteen flags that have flown on American soil since Christopher Columbus stepped ashore on the Island of San Salvador, Oct. 12, 1492. Mrs. Joseph Leaming of Ravinia, Past Regent of the North Shore Chapter, presented the flags, which were made by the group of women gathered to witness the presentation.

Mrs. Jared Johnson and Mrs. Evva Egan Truax hoisted the flags in the order of their description. The first was the flag of Spain, which had two red and two yellow castles and two red lions on two white blocks upon which were emblazoned the arms of Castile and Leon. Second, the banner of the expedition, white with a green cross, two golden crowns and the initials of Ferdinand and Isabella. This was the personal flag of Columbus, the gift of Queen Isabella, and was carried by the Pinzons following Columbus from the boats. Third, the flag of France, sky blue with 3 yellow Fleur de Lis. Jacques Cartier was probably the first man to bring the colors of France to the new world. He set up a cross and the flag of France near the site of Quebec. It is likely that Joliet and Marquette, the pioneer missionaries, and La Salle, the intrepid explorer, all bore this flag thru this wilderness, and this flag floated for many years over this country. Fourth, the Cabot flag, the cross of St. George, the crusader's flag. This was England's royal standard until 1606, and was planted June 24, 1497 by John Cabot on the northern extremity of Cape Breton Island, Nova Scotia. Probably the first English flag planted in the new world. Fifth, the cross of St. Andrew, the patron saint of Scotland. His banner was the diagonal white cross on a blue field. "The King's Colors." When James I of England, St. George's cross was joined with St. Andrew's, which made the union flag, which probably flew from the mainmast of the Mayflower when the Pilgrims landed in Plymouth in 1620, and possibly was on the ships that brought the English settlers to Jamestown in 1607. It was a blue flag with a rectangular red cross and a diagonal white one.

Seventh, the Meteor flag, a red ensign with the King's colors in the canton. This was the national emblem until 1801. Eighth, the Concord flag or the Bedford flag, a red banner with a figure on it representing an outstretched arm having the color of silver, such as mailed armor. In the hand is an uplifted sword. Three circular figures, also in silver, upon said to represent cannon balls. Upon a golden scroll are the words "Vincit aut Morietur" (Conquer or Die). The original of this is in the Public Library of Bedford, Mass., and was made about 1670 in England, and brought to the Massachusetts Bay Colony for an early military company. It was carried to Concord when Paul Revere made his famous ride, April 19, 1775. Ralph Waldo Emerson was inspired to write a poem on this flag.

Ninth, the White Pine Tree Flag, a white flag with a green pine tree and the inscription, "An Appeal to Heaven." This was used as the ensign of the vessels of the Mass. navy in 1776. Tenth, the Red Pine Tree flag, formed from the English ensign of the vessels of the Mass. navy from the canton and substituting the pine tree. This was known as the Continental Flag. Eleventh, the Bunker Hill flag, floated at the battle of Bunker Hill. It is a combination of red, white and blue with St. George's cross of England in the canton, and a pine tree, the symbol of independence, is also on the flag. Twelfth, the Fort Moultrie flag, or the Crescent or Liberty flag, the emblem of South Carolina. A blue flag bearing the word "Liberty".

Thirteenth, the Gadsden flag or the Rattlesnake flag, a yellow flag with the design of a rattlesnake coiled about to strike, upon it, and the words "Don't Tread on Me", underneath, was adopted. The southern colonies used the Rattlesnake flag from 1776 to 1777. John Paul Jones won some of his naval victories under it. Fourteenth, the Cambridge flag, the first striped flag. It has thirteen stripes of alternate red and white, to represent the thirteen colonies and a field representing the King's colors. It was unfurled at Washington's headquarters, Jan. 2, 1776. It was used until congress adopted the Stars and Stripes in 1777. Fifteenth, the Betsy Ross flag, our first starry flag; thirteen stripes, alternating red and white and thirteen stars on a blue field. Sixteenth, the Star Spangled Banner, also called Fort McHenry flag. Seventeenth, Old Glory, the original of which is in Essex Institute at Salem, Mass. Eighteenth, the Confederate flag, the Stars and Bars, carried in the Civil War. There are seven stars to represent the seceded states in the original flag, but eleven in states seceded. Nineteenth, the flag of Great Britain, the Union Jack, a combination of the crosses of St. George, St. Andrew and St. Patrick, which flies in British America.

The ceremonies began with the pledge to the flag, and concluded with the singing of The Star Spangled Banner.

Mr. Otto, the principal of the Deerfield school made the speech of acceptance of the flags.

Owners of automobiles and horse-drawn vehicles appearing on the streets without village vehicle license tags properly attached will be subject to arrest and fine. Police chief Peterson states that the ordinance will be strictly enforced on and after May 15, 1926.

FORMER RESIDENT DIES
Mrs. Oreal Kitch of Bourbon, Ind., wife of Oreal Kitch, former residents of Deerfield, passed away Friday, April 16, following child birth. Funeral services were held Sunday, April 18, at their home and burial was in Sandridge cemetery.

Mrs. Kitch was the daughter of August and Christina Landau of Deerfield and was born June 5, 1892. She was 33 years old at the time of her death.

On January 12, 1912, she was married to Oreal Kitch. After their marriage they settled in Bourbon where they resided since.

Mrs. Kitch leaves to survive her, her husband, Oreal and a son, Arthur, three sisters, Mrs. Lida Rockenbach of Los Angeles, Calif., Mrs. Laura Mailfald, and Mrs. Cecelia Frost of Deerfield, and one brother, Ed. Landau of Deerfield.

Union service at St. Paul's Evangelical church at 8 p. m.

The first union service in connection with our children's week program which was held at the Bungalow church last Sunday evening was a great success and we trust the remaining union services will prove as helpful. Each musical number carried with it a special message. The speaker of the evening, Dr. James Oliver Buswell, president of Wheaton college, brought a very intellectual message, laying the proper emphasis on giving God His place in the subject of religious education. This overcrowded house was an evidence of the interest shown.

Rehearsals for the week as usual, Wednesday evening at 8:00 o'clock the prayer service and Bible study night that you are interested.

The speaker for Sunday night will be Mr. Paul H. Vieth, director of research and service, International Council of Religious Education, Chicago. According to the title he ought to have a great deal to say, and I know he will have. Mr. Vieth was with us at our 50th anniversary last fall and everyone who heard him then surely wants to come Sunday night and hear him again. One thing I can absolutely guarantee, he will speak to us on religious education and its need and power in the lives of our children.

Let me call your attention to a special Mothers' Day service, May 9. No one should miss this service. Make plans to attend. A carnation for everyone that will be there.

The Ladies' Aid will meet next week Thursday at the home of Mrs. Phil Rommel on West Deerfield road. Every member come.

JUST PARAGRAPHS

Valentine Williams, whose "Mr. Ramos" has just been published by Houghton Mifflin Co. writes his publishers that the Riviera where he is recuperating from a recent illness, is fairly cluttered up with literary people; Rudyard Kipling who is convalescing, H. GOOD OLD ENGLAND
"JERICHO SANDS"
By Mary Borden
Alfred A. Knopf

Mary Borden, who is incidentally a Chicagoan, is a skilled novelist. But her very skill in this latest novel, "Jericho Sands" has led her astray. In attempting a method slightly bizarre she has become mainly garrulous.

The story of "Jericho Sands" which is not a person, but an English country place which stands for the tradition of the people involved, is told by two people. The first and third parts by a discursive old man, a friend of the family, who tells things mostly backward, and is constantly anticipating in a way so irritating to the defenseless reader, the second part by the "wronged man," who is at the time in process of going insane.

There are in "Jericho Sands" two characters who have our decided interest and our sympathy, to whom we would like to be brought closer. This in spite of the fact that Miss Borden has fallen in with the dear old tradition, to which Americans particularly are susceptible, of the tall, fair, clean limbed, close mouthed drinking, hunting, loyal, sporting, snobbish, bored, frivolous, fighting English gentry. Those people who before the War all lolled in basket chairs drinking tea, or played a rigorous and sporting game of tennis on a green grass court. We have had lots of it but still we "eat it up."

However, it was not Priscilla's fault that she belonged to the class, and as an individual she challenges and deserves our interest. She is one of the women characters whom Miss Borden is remarkably able in creating, a worthy compatriot even for "Jane—Our Stranger." In leaving her religious fanatic of a husband for Lord Crab Willing she flaunts the tradition of which she is a casual part. Her mother, tall, gaunt, kind-hearted, ridiculous Agatha scattering in her path religious tracts and groceries with the latter of which she could ill afford to part, is the other entirely authentic creation.

Priscilla's lover is an almost too perfect specimen of his class, suggesting too much a wax figure in Bond Street. The deserted husband with his religious views, which resemble those of Miss Hurst's heroine in "Appassionata," fails to rouse our sympathy at all. He appears to us and is a mild lunatic.

A NOVEL OF 1000 A. D.
"THE TALE OF GENJI"

Romain Holland in his introduction to the first volume of his work "Annette and Sylvie," begged from the reader suspension of judgment until all should have been read. In the the church is centering its effort. Surely Deerfield takes as much interest in children as any community, and does not want to stand back. Prove by your attendance next Sunday night that you are interested.

case of "The Tale of Genji" Lady Murasaki, having been in the Land of the Shades since sometime slightly after the year 1000, has been unable to rise up and beg the same indulgence. Yet it is probably more needed here since the work is a long one, and will come out in six volumes.

Genji is a Don Juan of medieval Japan. So fair to look upon, and so charming, that he wins all hearts in an instant. The telling of his story was a literary opportunity, but it seems to me from the reading of the first volume, to be an opportunity missed. It might be—for think of it, it is a novel written more than nine hundred years ago—a quaint and charming picture of old Japan. But it is neither of these things. It is surprisingly, disappointingly modern in its style and subject matter, it falls completely in making vivid that bizarre, it would seem to us, life of medieval Japan. We merely give a start of surprise at the frequent mention of screen walls or the large number of ladies in waiting who attend the prince, for the rest we think of him as a rather over-praised young man who wears a business suit but doesn't have to work for a living.

The translator calls "The Tale of Genji" "by far the greatest novel of the East" and compared with the fiction of Europe in his opinion it "takes its place as one of the dozen greatest masterpieces of the world." We can only reiterate there are six volumes, W. W. Waley has read them all, we have not.

Dicksey Fasnia visited the fifth grade Tuesday.

The fifth grade was disappointed by the weather man on Tuesday morning. They had planned a bird hike and he planned a shower. They are challenging the weather man for Wednesday morning.

The first graders have some very pretty ferns which Mr. Nesville, the florist, brought. We also have new curtains purchased with the money from the lunch served at school.

The fourth grade is glad to have Eugene Gloden back in school. He has been out several weeks with the chicken pox.

Robert Van Tegen of Glencoe has enrolled in the 4th class.

Herbert Hertel has returned to the 6th grade after being out with the chicken pox.

The third grade has enrolled a new pupil, Albert Van Treuren.

The third grade has been divided into three divisions. The purpose, being to induce higher grades. The division having the highest score at the end of the school term will have earned a party to be given by the losing divisions.

A tomato hot-bed has been started in the window box of the third grade room. The work was done by the pupils during nature study.
