The bride's gown of ivory satin was made entrain. The tulle veil was bordered with wide strips of rose-point lace that has been used for four generations in the family of the bride's late mother. The veil was held in place by a wreath of orange blossoms. An old-fashioned round bouquet supplanted the conventional shower bouquet.

Miss Louise Fentress served her sister as maid of honor and wore a gown of cornflower-blue chiffon. She wore no hat, but carried an old-fashioned bouquet bordered in paper lace and tied with silver ribbon.
