JUST PARAGRAPHS

The English language has been enriched by a new word, "thobbing," created by Mr. Henshaw Ward, which though not very musical has its place. It is derived from "think," "opinion" and "belief," and applies to that well-known individual who thinks without observing, forms an opinion which pleases him and then sticks to it. The idea is all right but the word is not half so good as the one coined for Chicago atmosphere—"smog."

It looks as if Floyd Dell after some rather futile wandering were returning to ground he knows. His latest book is "Love in Greenwich Village."

BEHIND THE FOOTLIGHTS

"HOME TALENT"

By Louise Closser Hale
Henry Holt & Co.

In "Home Talent" Louise Closser Hale has written an interesting story of the stage. Interesting because to the poor layman who pays a fabulous price to sit humbly before the row of footlights, that row marks the beginning of an enchanted land in which Mrs. Hale is an intimate. It is interesting to hear the inside story of a "first night," the terrible stage fright which makes the cast go about hoping that they will be run over before the zero hour, the good will of directors, other players, friends, which buoys up their fainting courage; it is interesting to hear something of directors and the directing of a play, the way it shapes itself as the rehearsals go on, as surely as clay takes on meaning under the sculptor's hands.

The plot of the book is not startling, the style in which it is written, while it is competent, is not inspired. It is the story of how Sharlie Flagg who thought her heart's desire lay on the stage, finds it is in being a good man's wife, after all.

Sharlie, with her winning personality and her red hair, has never found a better outlet for her talent for acting than "The Door of Hope Dramatic Society" in High Platte, until suddenly finding a way to raise the necessary carfare and breaking away from a disreputable aunt, she sets forth over the long well worn trail to New York.

But Sharlie, unlike most of her kind, has a lucky star. And on her first day in New York she happens to walk past the stage door where temperamental Alexis Orso is raging against his red haired leading lady who is always late for rehearsal. Catching sight of Sharlie he has an inspiration, and dragging her in, inserts her in the leading lady's part. Sharlie makes good, and then after the necessary trials and vicissitudes decides she loves Ben Dorsey of High Platte—even better than her career.

WONDERS REAL AND UNREAL

"THE YOUNG FOLKS BOOK OF INVENTIONS"

By T. C. Bridges, and

"THE YOUNG FOLKS BOOK OF MYTHS"

By Amy Cruze
Little Brown and Co.

Two more fascinating books have been added to the series published for young people by Little Brown and Company about the interesting things for the world.

First there is the "Young Folks' Book of Inventions." It is a good thing for youth in this blase age which has ceased to raise an eyebrow at the sight of men flying about like birds or swimming under water like fish, to call attention to the number of really remarkable things by which we are surrounded. We ourselves have become as used to the wonders of fire and glass as the younger generation to the radio, yet they were far more momentous discoveries when they were made, centuries ago. It is a very fair history of the race, this tracing of it by its inventions and makes besides, a very interesting story.

The other book "The Young Folks' Book of Myths" is a work, beautifully illustrated by drawings and reproductions of famous pictures, telling the myths and legends of the various races of the earth.

It gives an opportunity to trace the parallel stories which have come down to us pointing to a common ancestry or common experiences of the race. In Greece Orpheus has to seek Eurydice in the Land of Shades, while in India Sita is carried off by the wicked Ravanna, and her husband Rama goes to search for her.

It is well written and interesting to read from cover to cover as well as being very valuable as a book of reference.
