PLOWBOY TO METROPOLITAN PUBLISHER
M. C. Meigs Called to Position on Chicago Herald & Examiner; Is Highly Recommended

Merrill C. Meigs has just been made publisher of the Chicago Herald and Examiner, one of the most powerful of Hearst's newspaper properties; thus confirming all of the story book stories of poor boys risen to fame along the path of absolute integrity and sheer will.

"Babe" Meigs, they call him, (for he is of tremendous stature) and nobody questions his right physically or mentally to the heights to which he has attained.

His history is interesting because it is not unique. His achievement is interesting because it is founded on principles which all know and few follow.

It is not unique in America for a poor boy to leave the farm to brave the adventures of the big city and win his way to fame and fortune. But it is rather interesting to find a boy who takes with him the golden rule for his guidance and never for a moment lays it aside on his way.

This particular farm boy called Meigs, was born at Malcolm, Iowa, in 1883, and worked near there on his father's farm until he was seventeen. When he left the farm it was to go to work for the J. I. Case Threshing Machine Co. near Chicago, to sell threshing machines and farm engines to the farmers of Iowa.

He played fair with the farmers and evidently with the company too, for one year later found him on his way to South America to represent the J. I. Case Co. and teach the Spanish farmers in the Argentine how to run Case engines and threshing machines down there.

After two years in South America and Europe one finds this young giant at the age of twenty-one entering the University of Chicago. And here, too, for the first time, we begin to get an outside viewpoint of him.

That was in 1904. We begin to read newspaper accounts of this new young giant not yet eligible for athletics, but being watched by all the students on the campus in his workouts at the gymnasium and on the field.

All of the papers are looking forward to the following year when "Babe" Meigs will be eligible and will make a record ofr himself. And on the following year Babe Meigs was eligible and did make the record.

That was the year of the famous Chicago football team that beat Michigan two to nothing in a battle so terrible that the two Universities did not play together again for the next ten years. The year of Eckersall, and "Bubbles" Hill and "Babe" Meigs, Mark Catlin, Bezdek and Dan Boone.

Young Meigs won three stars on his blanket — football, baseball and swimming, kept up his studies and made his own living besides by being a college newspaper reporter for the Hearst papers.

When he left college it was to go back to the J. I. Case Co. as Advertising Manager and to remain there until 1914 when he left to come to the old Examiner, the same paper of which he has now been made publisher, as a solicitor of advertising.

But by this time he had hit his stride in business as he had previously hit it in athletics.

At the end of the year he had decided that he must know more about this advertising that he was selling. So he went to Mr. Albert Lasker, the head of Lord & Thomas, the great advertising agency, to be taught. And he remained there three years working and learning.

In 1917 he returned to the Hearst Properties, this time with the Chicago Evening American as advertising manager and assistant publisher.

In the nine years that followed that paper has grown from a position of comparative unimportance to one of the largest money-earners of the entire string of Hearst properties.

With this record in back of him Mr. Meigs has now been called to the position of publisher of Mr. Hearst's morning and Sunday paper in Chicago, the Herald and Examiner, and Mr. Hearst in his wire to Mr. Keen, the president of the Illinois Publishing company, has said:
"I know it will give you much satisfaction to announce that Mr. M. C. Meigs, your very able friend and as-

Desirable Citizens

The spendthrift never helps his community because he does not save a part of his earnings. And likewise the miser is not a good citizen because he hoards away his money and keeps it out of circulation.

The real desirable citizen is the man who saves a part of what he makes and yet does not deny himself and his family such comforts of life that he can afford. It is this kind of citizen that makes it possible for us to have a reservoir to finance our business and farming enterprises.

Come in and let us tell you about saving and how you can help our community grow and prosper.

associate, has been made publisher of the Herald and Examiner.
"I believe that Mr. Meigs' appointment will give equal satisfaction to the readers and business patrons of the paper."
"His long experience in journalism has highly developed his exceptional abilities, fortified his judgment and has won for him the confidence of the business community."
"His long connection with the paper, his life-long residence in Chicago, his wide acquaintance, and his genius for journalism make him, to my mind, peculiarly fitted for the position he now assumes."
So much for the farmer boy who brought with him the golden rule to the big city and made it pay out in honor and finance.
