TRIUMPH OR DISASTER?

Lathrop Stoddard's warning in his new book "Scientific Humanism," recently published, is not as pessimistic as it is timely.

"Ours is at once a glorious and perilous age," says Mr. Stoddard, "glorious because of its prospects of unprecedented good; perilous, by its possibilities of unparalleled ill. Never before in all its long history has mankind confronted such alternatives of triumph or disaster.

"Our dwelling-place, the earth, shrinks to the measure of human hands. Cosmic wonders, from the fiery whorls of outer nebulae to the pulsing heart of the minute atom, come within our ken. Most significant of all, even the mysterious depths of our own selves are being plumbed, and the hope of ancient sages: 'Know Thyself!' seems on the way to realization.

"Such is the brilliant side of our age. But there is another—and a darker side. . . . Indeed, it is not yet certain that we can permanently dwell in this new world of ours. The deeper we probe the recesses of human nature, the more painfully do we realize man's innate weaknesses and limitations. It is far from impossible that we may have undertaken a task beyond our ability, and that modern civilization may be headed for disaster. One well-known philosopher warns us of the fate of Icarus, the fabled youth of Greek mythology, who, rashly venturing to fly, crashed down to earth in speedy ruin. Other observers, yet more somber, go so far as to predict the possible extinction of all mankind.

"Whether these warning voices be true or false, one thing is certain: we moderns will never voluntarily quit this new world of ours. Another thing equally certain is that we must adjust ourselves to our new world or suffer the direct penalties; because man, like every other living being, is bound by nature's stern command to adapt or perish."

WORLD WAR SCENES TO BE RE-ENACTED

Battle of Chateau-Thierry Is to Be Staged at Sesqui-Centennial

A battleground of several acres arranged as a replica of the village of Chateau-Thierry with a realistic visualization of the River Marne, which ran red with the blood of the young manhood of many nations in May, 1918, provides the setting in which the most critical and important battle of the World war is reproduced at the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition, now being held in Philadelphia.

The production is presented in front of a background of oil paintings depicting the market places, taverns, government buildings, homes of the villagers and stone bridges of Chateau-Thierry. Memories of veterans who took part in the engagement will be stirred by the accurate reproduction of the battle, which was arranged under the direction of army officers who took prominent parts in the struggle.

The spectacle depicts each night of the famed engagement, and shows American troops, including "Devil Dogs," Allied and German troops, Red Cross nurses, refugees and picturesque natives all garbed in the costumes as they were seen at the time of the battle.

The realism is produced by heavy tanks rumbling over the cobble stones, barrage fires, smoke screens, the pounding of siege guns in the distance and the bark of the smaller guns used in the fray. Several hundred persons are used in the cast to re-enact the vivid scenes.

The paintings, in the background of the battlefield, were reproduced from photographs taken by the War department of the United States government. Skilled artists worked for months transforming the scenes of the town to a canvas background in their true colors.

AMERICANS USING LESS FLOUR NOW

Consumption of This Staple in U. S. Decreased 24 Per Cent Since 1904

Consumption of flour in the United States has declined 24 per cent since 1879, says the Department of Agriculture, and in seeking the reason it finds, for one thing, the increasing ability of the American people to have a more varied diet—a Americans do not live by bread alone, and they are now eating less bread than they once did.

The department's figures show that in 1904 each American used 5.4 bushels of wheat, but that the average current consumption has shrunk to 4.3 bushels. The bare figures do not make clear that flour is now used more efficiently, and that the quality of wheat has been steadily improved, two circumstances to explain the baking of bread with less flour than "the kind that mother used to make."

As the department puts it, other ingredients than flour may now form larger proportions in the composition of the commercial wheat loaf. On this point definite data are not available. It is worth nothing however, that according to the census of 1923, the baking industry, besides consuming 31,000,000 barrels of flour valued at $218,000,000, used other ingredients undoubtedly tended to satisfy wants which otherwise would have meant a larger draft on the flour supply.

There need be no misgiving about the place of bread in the American home, whatever the figures seem to suggest, for it still fortifies plain and fancy fare, and will continue to pass in any company.

AUTOMATIC MOTION PICTURE MACHINE

Daylight Movies Show Visitors to Sesqui-Centennial Its Many Features

The activities of virtually all of the various departments in the Government building at the Sesqui-Centennial International exposition, in Philadelphia, are demonstrated to the visitors at the exposition by means of a new daylight motion picture machine which operates without the aid of an operator.

The new projector, which is small, light and compact, can be placed on a table or carried from place to place and flashes a reel on a glass screen which is equally visible in broad daylight as well as at night. Many of the exhibitors at the exposition are also using the projector, which is known as the Capitol Self-Operating Projector, and the complete steps in the manufacture of world famous products are vividly made known to the visitors.

ELECTRIC RAILWAYS IN MOST U. S. CITIES

With one exception, all cities of the United States having a population of 25,000 persons or more have electric street railways. This represents an investment of nearly $6,000,000,000 and constitutes 2 per cent of the nation's wealth. During 1925 they provided transportation for more than 16,000,000,000 persons, which is equal to 140 rides for every inhabitant of the United States.

IT'S ILL WIND THAT BLOWS NOBODY GOOD

It's an ill wind that blows nobody good. And the laundry folk should give thanks for soft coal and soot. Cincinnati pays an extra $170,000 a year for laundering shirts and collars. Pittsburgh smoke adds $18 per capita per year to the laundry bill; and 90,000 tons of soot fall every year in Chicago. What's the answer? Use gas.
