

LABOR DIFFICULTIES IN ENGLAND SERIOUS

Much Rancor Still Exists Despite Settlement of the General Strike

The difficulties of the British coal miners and operators were by no means settled by the recent calling off of the British general strike, and the situation, as regards coal, is still grave, according to Albert H. Laidlaw, in the current issue of the National Republic. Writing under the caption "An American View of World Events," Mr. Laidlaw says: "As stated in the introduction of these comments, the controversy between the miners and the operators of the British coal mines was by no means settled when the general strike, growing out of the mine conflict, was called off. A sort of truce was brought about, but the actual settlement of the mine problem is not yet accomplished.

On the Surface
On the surface, the calling off of the general strike appears to be a sweeping victory for constituted governmental authority in Britain. Premier Baldwin had announced that no move would be made by the government to readjust the miners' complaints until the general strike had been called off, and only after the general strike, order had been rescinded and its illegality virtually admitted were new bases for negotiations for settlement of the mine problem brought forward under the government's wing. But it is nevertheless probable that the general strike demonstrated a degree of coercive power, heightening to the more revolutionary elements of the British labor movement, and that it ended only with an under-surface understanding of what its termination would mean. In spite of this, however, the Baldwin administration's method of meeting the situation is deserving of the commendation it has received, and it may be said that victory may be divided except among the extremists on both sides of the battle line.

Other Side
"The more conservative of the leaders among British labor are, undoubtedly, feeling as much satisfaction over the defeat of the general strike as the Baldwin ministry itself. For they are as aware as anybody that the strike was a minority weapon with dictatorial purposes, and they are far-sighted enough to see that dictatorship is a method of dealing with situations quite as well adapted to the use of one minority as another. Repudiation of parliamentary power is as dangerous to the labor movement in Britain as to the government itself, and only the so-called left-wingers of the movement ignore this fact."

PRESIDENT PLANS TO ASSIST THE FARMERS

Belief Is That He Has Only Begun to Fight for Legislation Needed

There are substantial grounds for believing that President Coolidge has only begun the fight on the matter of farm relief. And those who are watching affairs anticipate even after the adjournment of congress, he will make one more demonstration in that line. It is a matter of general congratulation that the Co-operative Marketing Bill which will allow real work in that direction, came out of the hopper. This apparently was one line on which all parties are in unison.

There has been considerable discussion pro and con as to the causes which led to the President's issuance of the statement which Senator Fess gave to the newspapers. The plain truth which probably deserves to be a part of the record is that the President from the beginning, with a sincere understanding of the agricultural situation has been anxious for definite legislation. His feeling has been that it was better to venture some distance than to remain in idleness awaiting the development of the ideal solution. Yet, notwithstanding the fact that in conversation with congressional leaders, he made plain in no uncertain manner his sympathy with the plight of the farmers he found a feeling existing which made it appear he was indifferent, or at the best willing to make a gesture, but not anxious for its fulfillment.

Your Place is no place for waste!

MAKE war on waste! Waste of power—waste of machinery—waste of money—especially in your automobile, truck and tractor.

To attack waste actively, think about the Sinclair Law of Lubrication:

"For every machine, of every degree of wear, there is a scientific Sinclair Oil to suit its speed and seal its power."

You know that the more miles your car is driven, the more wear there is in the engine. You also know how many miles your car or truck has been driven. Sinclair knows, by the mileage, the average wear there is in the engine and which of the several grades of Opaline Motor Oil is the right grade to seal its power.

The Sinclair dealer in your neighborhood will be glad to tell you the grade your engine needs now! Let him give you a copy of "Oiling"—Sinclair's new help-booklet for motorists, describing and illustrating this sound, common-sense method of motor oil recommendation.
