

WHY STUDENT CARS BARRED AT ILLINOIS

TEXT OF THE REGULATION

New Ruling at State University Is Explained and Reasons Are Given; Co-Operation Is Requested

Student automobiles will be barred at the University of Illinois starting September 1, according to a regulation adopted by the council of administration of that institution and announced today. The council, composed of the president, the deans of the various colleges, the dean of women and the dean of men, is the body charged by the board of trustees with matters pertaining to student welfare.

Text of Regulation
The regulation, as adopted, states that "no undergraduate student registered in the departments of the University of Illinois in Urbana and Champaign is permitted to operate and motor vehicle during the time the university is in session (excluding regular vacations) unless he has from the council of administration a specific permit based upon demonstrated necessity or special convenience. A student who lives with his parents or guardian must present from such parents or guardian a written request for a permit. No permits are granted minor students except upon the written request of the parent or guardian."

Five reasons for barring cars are cited in a letter being mailed by the council to the parents and guardians of all students, scheduled to reenter school next fall, and to those of prospective freshmen who are applying for admission. The reasons advanced are:

Reasons Given
The scholastic standing maintained by the majority of students owning or operating automobiles has been below the average scholastic standing of the university;

The owning of automobiles has involved a constant and serious waste of time;

There have been numerous accidents involving considerable damage and serious bodily injury;

There are constant violations of local and state laws governing motor traffic, and a wholly unnecessary and dangerous congestion of traffic in streets adjacent to the campus.

The use of cars has contributed to moral delinquencies which have resulted in the dismissal from the university of the students concerned.

Asks Co-operation
The letter asks the parents to cooperate with the university in carrying out this new regulation, telling them that "students in general have absolutely no need for an automobile during their residence in the university." The letter also points out the fact that at the beginning of the school year for the past three years a letter to parents and guardians has referred to the dangers involved in students having cars, but that conditions have caused the council reluctantly to come to the belief that it is necessary to pass the regulation which it has adopted.

Lothrop Stoddard Tells In His New Book Why Intelligence Tests Are Opposed

That the opposition to intelligence tests is largely due to emotional idiosyncrasies is pointed out by Lothrop Stoddard in his new book, "Scientific Humanism." Mr. Stoddard says: "Ofhand, one might think that the application of science to the vital problems of our age would inspire a high idealism which would spur the forces of intelligence and good-will to concerted, harmonious endeavor. . . . Far from it! Instead of harmony, we see the Camp of Progress split wide open on the most vital questions of the day. About matters like heredity and race-betterment, what should have been intelligent discussion has degenerated into emotional controversy, with the bitterest notes struck by persons who especially pride themselves on their 'progressivism!'"

"The unseemly wrangle over the intelligence tests is a good case in point. The formulators and advocates of the tests were at once assailed by a clamor of protest, clearly emotional in the main. The trouble was that the scientific generalization behind the tests (the concept that men differ widely and ineradicably in inborn intellectual capacity) ran counter to the older idea that such differences either did not exist or could be nullified by education and other environmental influences."

"The shock to this established idea instantly aroused defensive emotional reactions, which were not controlled, but were given free reign. The upshot was that what might have been fruitful criticism degenerated, for the most part, into mere 'rationalizing' or even into downright personal abuse. Not only were the tests themselves impugned; the framers and advocates of the tests were bitterly assailed as 'enemies of democracy,' and creators of a 'new snobbery'—in short, as sinister and generally undesirable persons. All of which merely showed

RUSS RECOGNITION HAS ITS DANGERS

EXPERIENCE OF BRITISH OPENS WAY FOR EASY ENTRY FOR SOVIET PROPAGANDA DAMAGING TO DEMOCRACY; IS UNWISE FOR U. S.

British recognition of soviet Russia is having its logical consequences. The British government recently sent a note of protest to the Moscow government on account of aid furnished by the Bolshevik government during the general strike to those who were active in fomenting the trouble.

The situation in England during the general strike was critical. It was realized that if the strike got out of hand the next thing might be revolution. The aid was furnished by the communists, not because of any love for the British coal miners, but in the hope that a revolution might result and a soviet government be set up in England. The money sent, therefore, was to be used for the purpose primarily of undermining the British government and bringing about a socialist revolution if it could be effected.

Starting Disclosures
It is stated on good authority that the British government is preparing in the form of a white book, some startling disclosures of the plans of the British Reds. The information, it is stated, was secured by government agents in the numerous raids made on Communist headquarters a few months ago. It is said that these disclosures will contain facsimiles of forty documents which go to prove that the intelligence testers had trodden on somebody's emotional corns."

directly concerned in the penetration of the British labor groups by the Reds.

Great Britain of course is reaping the results of official recognition of the soviet government. This recognition has made it much easier for the communists to get funds into Britain and to carry on the red propaganda which they regard as their world-wide mission. And this revolutionary work has been performed in spite of an agreement made by the soviet government that it would engage in no anti-capitalistic propaganda in Great Britain.

Results Disappointing
The recognition of Russia by Great Britain was brought about by the pressure of commercial interests who thought that it would greatly increase British trade. The results along this line have been disappointing, and the political results on the other side of the balance sheet have been serious.

Certainly the recent experiences of Great Britain will not furnish much ammunition for those in America who think that the United States government ought to resume official relations with Russia and its red government.
