

GET OTHER MAN'S POINT OF VIEW

IS MOTORISTS' DIFFICULTY Good Advice on This Subject Is Given by Technical Adviser of New York Y. M. Auto School

By H. Clifford Brokaw
To get the other fellow's point of view is one of the greatest difficulties which confronts many motorists at the present time. If the thousands of people who are driving automobiles on American highways could in some way be helped to have a greater appreciation of what is in the mind of the other man it is quite likely that the percentage of serious accidents would be greatly reduced. It is practically a certainty, also, that there would be much more enjoyment in motoring, much more pleasure in living for those who do not motor and a distinct conservation of good will for the whole industry.

Who Is He?
In this connection the question is likely to arise as to who is the other fellow. The pedestrian is conspicuously one of the other fellows. It ought to be rather easy for the average motorist to get the point of view of the pedestrian because there are many motorists who still have occasion to join the ranks of the pedestrians at certain times and therefore must be familiar with their mental reactions. There is, however, a difference in point of view between the motorist who is temporarily a pedestrian and the individual who very seldom if ever becomes a motorist. To get the latter's point of view is much more difficult. However, it ought not to be an insurmountable achievement and having been accomplished the motorist is bound to have more consideration for those pedestrians who appear on our streets and highways where he happens to be motoring.

Other motorists are among the other fellows whose point of view needs to be considered. Here the driver of any automobile ought to have little difficulty since their problems are the same. If the motorist will consider the convenience and safety of other motorists; if he will apply the Golden Rule in his action respecting other drivers of automobiles, much good ought to be accomplished. In fact, it is hard to imagine any situation where the Golden Rule can be put into effect to greater advantage than in the automotive field.

Occupants Also
The occupants of automobiles are also other people whose point of view should be thought of. A driver who has passengers in the car he is operating has very definite obligations respecting these human beings. He may be willing to take a certain risk as far as his own life is concerned but if he gives any consideration to the point of view of his fellow occupants of the car he can find no justification for any tendency toward recklessness. His attitude toward the passengers in other automobiles on the road should be similar. Property owners are included in the list of other fellows whose problems need appreciation on the part of motorists. It is so easy for a person driving an automobile to quickly remove himself from any particular piece of property that there may be a tendency on his part not to give the property rights of others the keen consideration which otherwise he would obtain. At any rate, the motorist has considerable opportunity to damage the property of others more or less in connection with his automobile operations, which fact has been the source of great annoyance to many people whose property happens to be close to our many lines of automobile traffic. There is evidence in some sections that this annoyance is well founded. It would be greatly reduced if the motorist undertook to get the point of view of the property owners.

Has Big Stake
Society at large has a big stake in the present automobile situation, for any factor in our civilization which has possibilities of being a definite menace is something of special interest to the people of the nation as a whole. While it is recognized that the many automobile transportation facilities represent a tremendous gain for society in the progress toward a better civilization, yet it cannot be denied that the disrespect of many motorists for the point of view of other people represents a menace which must be taken into consideration. Fortunately the proportion of those who fail to give proper consideration to others is not large but unless, if possible, encouragement is given in the direction of greater attention to the rights of society as a whole the situation can become very damaging to our national life. There must be greater respect for the state as expressed in its speed laws, its high valuation on life and its attempt to bring about those things which make for the best interests of the people as a whole.

A man in Chicago beat his wife for spoiling a bridge hand for him and the court gave the woman a divorce. This shows the danger of electing judges who don't know anything about bridge.
Secretary Hoover has been told that he has no power now over the radio. That's enough to make any man happy.

BIGGER PEACHES BRING FARMER MORE PROFITS

Grade, condition and size are controlling factors in establishing the price of peaches. Returns to the growers are relatively much less on poor quality than on high quality peaches, since packing charges, freight and refrigeration are as high per unit in both cases. This is brought out by the U. S. department of agriculture in a comparison of jobbing prices for peaches in New York in 1925.

For the best quality Georgia Elbertas the price was $2.59 per six-basket carrier, compared with only $1.63 per carrier of peaches of poorer quality. For the best peaches the net returns to the grower ranged around $1.19 per carrier, or 46 per cent of the sale price, while for the poor quality the grower received only 33 cents or 20 per cent of the sale price.

On the best quality of Georgia peaches of large size, New York City jobbing quotation from 1920 to 1925, inclusive averaged approximately double the price of peaches classed as poor quality. Yet quantities of inferior peaches were found on the large markets almost every day. There is evidently much room, says the department, for better methods of production, grading, and handling.

The size of peaches has an important bearing on the price. A package of larger size peaches usually brings a considerable premium over one of a smaller size. On shipments from Georgia in 1925 there was a difference of about 35 cents per six-basket carrier in favor of peaches 2 to 2 1/2 inches in diameter compared with peaches 1 1/2 to 2 inches in diameter. Growers in a New Jersey pool in 1923 received for 2 1/2-inch, No. 1 Elbertas an average price of $1.80 per bushel compared with 80 cents for No. 1 Elbertas averaging 2 inches in diameter. If growers can increase the average size of their peaches by thinning and better cultural methods they may increase their returns. A peach 2 1/2 inches in diameter has practically twice the volume of a peach only 2 inches in diameter. A tree would have to produce twice as many 2-inch peaches as 2 1/2-inch peaches to fill the same number of packages; and the smaller fruit would probably sell for a lower price per package.

Now that Florida is gradually settling back to normalcy, wonder where the sure-thing boys will start the next boom?

NEW RAT POISON NOT FATAL TO HUMANS

According to results of experiments conducted jointly by the bureau of biological survey and chemistry of the U. S. dept. of agriculture, a powder can be made from dried red-squill bulbs which has an efficient and uniform toxicity for rats but at the same time apparently does not unduly endanger human beings or domestic animals.

The use of powdered red squill for the destruction of rats is comparatively recent in this country, although the poison has been in limited use in Europe for centuries. It has never come into popular use, however, even there, because of its tendency to vary greatly in potency. Several of the factors influencing its toxicity have been developed during the course of the present investigation. Officials of the dept. of agriculture anticipate that these experiments will be of material assistance in the production of a uniform and stable squill product. This poison should greatly benefit the poultrymen and farmers generally who hesitate to use some of the commercial rat poisons on account of the attending danger to livestock.

A few years ago we had a "buy a bale of cotton" movement to help cotton prices. Why not start a "buy a load of corn" movement now?
Let us hope there is nothing prophetic in the fact that the congressmen are getting home from Washington at the height of the raspberry season.
