PINEAPPLE FRUIT KNOWN TO ANCIENTS

Some Facts About This Popular Product of Hawaii Given Smooth Variety

There was about 300,000 tons of pineapple canned in the Hawaiian Islands in 1925, the bulk of which is consumed in the United States.

Analysis made by the United States Department of Agriculture shows that the artificially ripened fruit sold in the American market as fresh pineapple, lacks the proper formation of sugar and is never the same in food value or flavor as the naturally ripened fruit.

The ancients apparently knew about the pineapple, and the inhabitants of many tropical lands for many years have eaten and relished this fruit.

When asked what she thinks of the flapper, Lady Astor replied: "I don't quite know what the flapper is."
