"Tongues in trees." Shakespeare The trees are always speaking to those who care to listen.

Not only when the leaves ar rustling beneath the beat of the wind, but equally so, when the leafless branches, unmoved by any breath, stretch their eloquent tracery against the gray skies.

Today the woods are gay with the rich tints of autumn and tonight. on thousands of hearthstones the trees will be telling their secret messages in the heart of the home. What is this message?

"Sings the blackened log a tune Learned in some forgotten June. This is the answer. I do not know who wrote it. I came upon it years ago, carved in the mantle of an ancient fireplace.

This is the interpretation: The log upon the andirons, in flame and music and perfume is giving forth, as it warms the home, the light and song and odors of the woods, gathered in some June of long ago.

Let the warm and laughter and joy of life which comes to all in youth, be so stored and treasured that "when winter comes" it may be given back to warm and cheer the hearts of men.
