The fifth grade is doing some interesting work in nature study this spring. Bird booklets are being made and our trees are being studied in some detail. In English class nature stories are being written. After having heard Enos A. Mills' story of a Thousand-Year Pine, the class was asked to write the story. Clinton Ritter handed in the following poem:

The Thousand-Year Pine
I lived in a cabin where the birds used to sing,
I loved nature and everything,
I used to watch the chipmunks as o'er the fields they ran
And I used to watch the mountain goats who were much afraid of man.
I loved to watch the wholly sheep
When at night they went to sleep
And not far from our cabin
There was a tree that reached to heaven
And go—how many years old it was,
One thousand—forty—seven.

Once there was a mountain slide
A rock came down and hit its side
The rock stuck there so fast
That when I found it the bark had grown over it at last
And once the lightning must have hit the tree
Because the marks I could plainly see.
One day the men came
And they said they'd have to cut the tree of fame
That was the day that I wasn't full of glee
But I was as sorry as I could be
It was sad to think of its end
For the tree to me was like a friend.

A number of Campfire Girls of the Netappew Group II with their chaperon, Mrs. Christine M. Knaak attended the fifteenth birthday anniversary of Campfire Girls of Chicago territory at Orchestra hall, Chicago, Friday, March 18.
