ECONOMY AND EFFICIENCY

The record of economy and of efficient business administration which President Coolidge laid before the country in his address at the twelfth regular meeting of the business organization of the government provides a main reason why the chief executive of the nation is "strong with the country" says the Detroit "Free Press," and why political attacks upon him in and out of congress fall flat. The nation knows that Mr. Coolidge is delivering the goods, and is doing so painstakingly and conscientiously, whereas the members of the Order of the Open Mouth that orate in other public places are for the most part delivering only oratory.

The "Free Press," further says, "The country cannot afford to do otherwise than cherish an administration which has the practical common sense indicated in these late remarks of the President in which he said: 'With a full treasury and revenues at flood, it requires courage to continue along the lines we have been following these last years. I am speaking not alone from an executive standpoint but also from a legislative one . . . It is pleasurable and easy to give. It is difficult to withhold . . . Projects that eventually will be resolved into completed works, purposes and policies that in time to come must be adopted and financed, if accepted in their entirety today would throw a tax burden upon the people that would cripple business, check prosperity, and convert our annual deficit. What needs to be done should be done . . . For extravagance and unnecessary provision there is no justification. I intend always to recommend sufficient appropriation to do what is necessary to be done. If I err in my judgment, I prefer to err on the side of saving rather than on the side of spending.'"
