The Obstruction "Yes, sir," narrated the motorist, "the old hack quivered a bit, with the motor still running, mind you, came to a dead stop, and refused to budge an inch. What do you suppose was the trouble?" "Rear end?" guessed his friend. "Darned if I know. But, rear or front end, there he was, right under the front wheels."

AMERICAN PRESS IS GENERALLY RELIABLE

DESPITE PROPAGANDA

As a Rule U. S. Newspapers Are Patriotic and Abhor the Internationalist; Few Are Subsidized

In his recent New York address, President Coolidge spoke of the value and even necessity of a press that is thoroughly American. With this idea, every real American, regardless of politics, will of course be in hearty agreement with the President. Fortunately, says the National Republic, the bulk of the American press is thoroughly American. Mistakes in policy which the great majority of our papers may make, if any, are due not to lack of Americanism, but to a misunderstanding of the subject. This is as it should be, for as the President says "an American press which has all the privileges which it enjoys under our institutions and which derives its support from the progress and well being of our people ought to be first of all thoroughly American."

Thorough Understanding A thorough understanding of our foreign relations and of world events is not always easy. The reason lies not in any obtuseness on the part of our editors or undue reticence on the part of the State department. Unfortunately most of the great news-gathering facilities, outside our American press associations and our American correspondents abroad, are in the hands of foreign interests. These foreign interests naturally see things through the eyes of their own governments, and the interests of these foreign governments, which control the press associations are not always parallel to the best interests of the United States. Our State department may be in touch with the true situation but it is not always advisable or politic for the State department to make public all that it knows. To do so would tend to promote world peace, but world discord. In other words, it is sometimes as inadvisable for the State department of one nation to tell what it knows or suspects about its neighbors as it is for another.

bers as it is for an individual to do the same thing.

Flood of Propaganda As a result of these handicaps, and because of the news-control facilities of some of these foreign nations, we are at times subjected to an unsuspected flood of propaganda, on Chinese affairs and other world situations in which our support is sought for some policy or other. All of this makes it a little difficult for the average American editor always to arrive at the true situation and that he makes as fine a score in this game as he does speak highly of his intelligence and judgment. The propaganda game is not a new one. It has been employed by various Old World nations for centuries.

There are of course a few American newspapers which are controlled by international minds but these are fortunately in the minority, and the public is getting pretty well on to them.

Obliging Let us therefore thank Providence for our real American press. May it multiply and prosper, and let us do everything we can as individuals to support it.

The collector rang the bell persistently. Finally the door was opened by a fluffy little woman. When the collector had stated his business she said, "I would like you to come back at exactly four o'clock this afternoon."

Precisely on time the collector again rang the bell. He waited. At last the door was opened by the woman, very careless as to clothes and tousled as to hair.

"Here I am," announced the collector. "Where's my money?"

"Oh," said the woman in a sleepy voice, "I haven't any money for you. But my alarm clock is broken and I did so want to be awakened from my nap in time for a bridge party. Thank you so much."

One of our young lady friends informs us that if Pan-Americanism has anything to do with the frying pan, she does not want to know anything about it.
