UPHOLDS SEIZURE OF RUM RUNNERS

BEYOND THE 12-MILE LIMIT

U.S. Supreme Tribunal Decides Coast Guard Had Right to Take Vessels; Other Decisions

The Supreme Court has upheld the coast guard in seizure as rumrunners of two vessels beyond the 12-mile limit but refused to pass upon the constitutionality of the British rum treaty...

The seizure cases were instituted by Arthur Maul of Connecticut and James M. Lee of Massachusetts and involved, respectively, the vessel Underwriter, taken 34 miles off the coast...

Text of Decisions In sustaining the seizure and forfeiture of the Underwriter, the court declared the coast guard had authority to take any vessel "liable to seizure by virtue of any law respecting the revenue..."

It based its decision in the Lee case upon its findings in the Underwriter, and held that evidence obtained thru seizure of the small boat could be used in court.

The British rum treaty was attacked by the Neptune Association of Masters and Mates and others who contended it violated the prohibition amendment by permitting British vessels to bring intoxicating liquors into American ports...

It was contended that this operated to the detriment of American vessels which were prohibited from having intoxicating liquor on board.

Other Cases Decided The Colorado anti-trust law was declared void and unconstitutional by the court in an appeal brought by the district attorney of Denver...

The court refused to pass on the claim of the Creek Indian Nation for compensation from the federal government for more than 23,000,000 acres of land taken from them in 1814.

Railroad, industrial and other companies owning coal cars can be restricted, the court held, in the use of them in getting fuel during times of car shortage by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

In a decision in the "assigned car" case, the court sustained orders of the commission requiring privately owned cars to be counted in the pro rata assignment of cars to soft coal mines during times of car shortage. The decision was rendered in ten cases appealed by the government.

THIRD TERM TALK IS DISAPPEARING

Opponents of President Help to Make Him More Popular, Is Belief

It is the opponents rather than the proponents of the renomination of Calvin Coolidge who are making his renomination almost inevitable. Until recently, the normal American voter appreciating that Mr. Coolidge's present term had almost two years to run, was giving but scant attention to the mechanics of political activities. The general content and satisfaction with Coolidge must be credited with having contributed to this quietness. The proponents and admirers of the President were saying little—they were satisfied to allow the favoring winds to blow.

RATHER PERSONAL

Dad: "I'll not have this. You must come home earlier. Why, what on earth would a college educated girl be doing out this late in a car?" Co-Ed: "Now, daddy, don't get nasty."

FAMOUS HINTS

"Just excuse my watch isn't going in no reason for you to park here all night."

GEE GOSH YES

"What is that noise?" "It's an owl." "Yes, I know, but who the deuce is 'owling?'"

PLACE FOR EVERYTHING

Anxious Father: "You say you want to marry by daughter? Have you a situation?"
