The Church of the Holy Comforter, where the service was read, filled to capacity, seems especially well planned for ceremonies of this kind. The long center aisle was lighted on either side by tapers, and on opposite sides of the altar were huge masses of pink and lavender chrysanthemums and autumn leaves shining above the branches of lighted candelabra. The Rev. Leland Danforth officiated.

The bride was very beautiful in her mother's wedding gown of heavy ivory satin, trimmed in Chantilly lace, which has been in the family a hundred years. Her bouquet was of lilies-of-the-valley, sweet peas and orchids. Her bridesmaids were each in pink chiffon velvet gowns, made very simply, without ornament, in a quaint old fashioned style, and they carried old fashioned bouquets of pink roses, sweet peas, and snapdragons. The maid of honor, Elizabeth Shipman, sister of the bride, was in orchid velvet, carrying the same type of flowers with the added touch of lavender sweet peas and delphinium to carry out the color of her gown. Each attendant had a band of tulle about her hair caught with a single rosebud.

The ring bearer, Bobbie Branch, nephew of the groom, was dressed in white satin. Mrs. George Shipman, mother of the bride, was in flesh colored chiffon, ornamented with pearls and brilliants.

The large reception which followed the wedding service, at the Kenilworth club, gave evidence of the popularity of these young people and of the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Shipman. Among those from out of town were Mr. and Mrs. Hinsey Ottumwa, Iowa, Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Amsbury, Champaign, Ill., Mrs. David Proctor, Peoria, Ill., and L. C. Merriman of Canton, Ohio. The club rooms were beautifully decorated in roses and greens and the guests were entertained by soft violin music throughout the evening.

COOLIDGE DECISION NOT AN IMPEDIMENT

IN MODERN BUSINESS LIFE

Economic Effect of His Refusal Run Again Trifling, Says Expert; Politics Is No Longer Factor

Business conditions are such that the financial world is not particularly disquieted at the thought of a new president, according to a statement by Alexander Dana Noyes in the October Scribner's Magazine.

"President Coolidge's terse announcement of August 2, 'I do not choose to run for President in 1928,' altered the visible programme to such extent that neither politicians nor financial markets have even yet adjusted themselves to the new situation. That Mr. Coolidge would be a candidate again next year, and that the chances strongly indicated his re-election, had been universally taken for granted in the business community. The factor of politics as an uncertain element in forecasts for the financial future had therefore been virtually dismissed, except for somewhat futile controversy as to whether the President did or did not really mean what he said and whether, even if he did, he might not be forcibly drafted by his party.

"On the Stock Exchange the announcement was greeted at first by a violent fall in prices. But the stock market had got itself into a range of values so far inflated by speculation for the rise that most people had already come to expect the upsetting of its equilibrium by any unpleasant surprise. After that momentary shock, consideration of the actual political results or of their influence on financial sentiment was deferred by tacit agreement until political and financial activities should both have returned to the usual autumn pace. Nevertheless, the fact that the as yet uninterrupted upward sweep of American prosperity began with the election of 1924 left the financial mind in considerable doubt on the question how far the era of good times was a consequence of the fortunate harvests of 1924, how far of other notable developments in the industrial domain, and how far of Mr. Coolidge's continuance in office.

"An open field for presidential candidacies, with no single overshadowing personality, has usually meant conflict of politics in the electoral campaign. Even in 1924, though Coolidge's opponent was a highly conservative public man, the mere possibility of a change had its part in that year's hesitancy in the business community, and the experience may be repeated. On the other hand, the campaign of 1924 followed a disappointing business year, whereas that of 1928 will follow and perhaps accompany unusual trade prosperity. The conviction which still mostly prevails in the thoughtful minds is that continuance of such prosperous trade would of itself be assurance against political unrest and, therefore, against the probability of disquieting change of personnel or politics."

TRY COURTESY TO CURE ROAD-HOGGITS

"There's a new remedy abroad in motordom that is reputed to work well in the case of the road-hog," advises Charles M. Hayes, president of the Chicago Motor club. "It isn't a matter of 'out-hogging' him, either. The cure now being tried is that of giving him a sample of the courtesy he should show. It is only natural that it should work in some measure. 'Courtesy is contagious; good drivers should resist their impulse to retaliate. When the road-hog realizes that he is alone in his rudeness he becomes self-conscious of his errors,'" says Mr. Hayes.

Youth is said not to take advice, but it is usually willing to give some. The theorists object to "pussyfooters," but the pussyfooters are better than the folks who don't do anything with their feet except kick.

INCREASE IN SALARIES OF JUDGES IS UPHELD

Decision of Supreme Court May Result in More Money for County Jurists

Validity of the act of 1925 increasing the salaries of county judges has been upheld by the supreme court in granting petitions for writs of mandamus filed by county judges of Union, St. Clair, Iroquois and Adams counties and the belief in legal circles here is that the same action will be taken on the salaries of the probate judge which will automatically bring an increase of the local jurists by an act of the board of supervisors more than a year ago.

There were two separate bills prepared by the state assembly granting the probate and county judges an increase in proportion to the population. Here the figure is set at $5,000.

There was some question at the time as to the legality of the act so 32 counties opposed the increase and the matter went into the supreme court. The court has ruled on the one proposition only but it is believed that the action will be the same on probate judge.

Keeping the legislation in mind the board of supervisors in 1925 provided in their appropriations for the increase based on the provision of the acts were declared valid by the supreme court.

In the meantime the salaries continued at $3,500 per annum.

Judge P. L. Persons of the county court and Judge Martin D. Decker of the probate court, apparently, will be receiving $5,000 annually in the near future and will be entitled to their "back pay" of $1,500 additional a year since the act of 1925.
