ANOTHER VICTORY

Another good American institution has been given a clean bill of health. The experts on diet have discovered that the reliable dish of ham and eggs is all right. The high brows have been telling us for years that the old fashioned "ham and" like a great many other old-fashioned American habits was all wrong. But now it is discovered not suddenly but after many years of patient experimentation that this American dish is all right from the dietary standpoint. The ham is rich in Vitamin B but lacking in Vitamin A while the egg has the Vitamin A but is short on the B. What could be sweeter than this, asks the National Republic?

This is the second blow the American "liberals" have had recently. For years they urged us to look down on good old American apple pie, but now this toothsome dish has been given the official OK of the experts—at least of a great many of the experts. It would of course be impossible to get them all to agree on any one thing.

We have been lectured for years now by the liberals and the internationalists on the shortcoming of everything American from our foreign policy and our Constitution down to the things we eat and read. But now the pendulum seems to be swinging in the other direction and there is cause for rejoicing. To win a victory on ham and eggs and apple pie is no small American achievement in itself. Who knows? Maybe if we keep on trying we will find that some of our other customs and institutions are not so bad after all. There is hope for the future, in spite of the insidious efforts of the internationalists, the cancellationists, the spinach eaters and lettuce nibblers.

In the meantime there is another consoling thought. In spite of the warnings given them the American people have gone on with their ham and eggs and their apple pie until the experts have come around to their way of thinking. Therefore there is still hope for other American institutions. Maybe the rest of the high brows will come around too.
