TOO MUCH FOR GRANTED

The average American citizen takes his government too much for granted. Lewis E. Pierson, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, warns the people that "we are drifting more and more to legislative action under pressure of special groups—economic, religious, social or sectional—and are forgetting the fundamental principles on which this country was founded."

Referring to great deficits created under governmental operation of industries during the World War period, Mr. Pierson said: "The real disaster to American rights was the encouragement which these government ventures gave to the growth of bureaucracy and to the blurring of the sharp lines between the pure functions of representative government and the rights of a free and progressive people."

"The greatest responsibility of American business to our government, is the duty of recalling government to those great and dignified purposes for which that government was created."

TRIBUTE TO COUNTRY PRESS

"The smaller newspapers of the country are the most important newspapers, and incidentally, in proportion to their circulation, their advertising results are the biggest, and their advertising rates are the smallest in the country. They are read through from end to end. Every copy of circulation means an entire family, not a family that lives in one room with a can opener, but a family that owns its own house, and land around it, at least ninety times out of a hundred; a family that buys everything, from the roof on the house, to the cement on the cellar floor; from the hat on mother's head to the shoes on the boys' feet. The service that their publishers render to the public is, in my opinion, the most important service rendered by any class of citizens in the United States. The country editors are distributors of information; they reach the minds of the boys that leave the farms, and they are the nation's mental police force," says Arthur Brisbane.

After half a century in the publication of newspapers, daily and weekly, the writer can indorse the opinion of Arthur Brisbane that the country paper is read from end to end, and the advertisements are of special interest. Where a hundred read all that is in the home weekly, only one in that one hundred peruses all that is in the big city daily paper that comes to them. Large foreign advertisers are also becoming cognizant of the fact that space in country weekly and smaller city daily papers is of real value to them; that they can gain more at less cost; at the same time securing as much combined circulation with a certainty that their advertisements will be read by all.—Woodburn, Ore., Weekly Independent, April 12.

A social hour followed the business meeting and refreshments were served by hostesses Mrs. Bruce Blaine, Mrs. Ed Jacobson and Mrs. Alvin Knaak.

"BOYS' WEEK" BEING OBSERVED THIS WEEK

Following the celebration of Mother's day, on the second Sunday in May, it would seem appropriate to observe the following week as "boys' week."

In this period of time, we are privileged to study the American boy intensively, his interests, his work, and his recreation. Books play a big part in the average boy's life. Here are a few books thoroughly enjoyable for any wide awake boy.

Dark Frigate—Hawes. Captains Courageous—Kipling. Master Skylark—Bennett. With the Indians in the Rockies—Schultz.

Prince and the Pauper—Clemens. Boy's Life of Theodore Roosevelt—Herman Hagedorn.

Working Through at Lincoln High—Gollomb. Cedric the Forester—Marshall. College Years—Paule.

Kidnaped—Stevenson. Treasure Island—Stevenson. Penrod and Sam—Tarkington.

Young Trailers—Altsheier. Gold Seeking on the Dalton Trail—Thompson.

"The Job of Being a Dad" may be read with interest and profit by the fathers of boys.

Young men and older boys will enjoy the following: Thru College on Nothing a Year—Christian Gauss.

Young Man and His Vocation—Thomas Arke Clark.

West Point—Harold Hammond. Boy Scouts of America—Handbook for Scoutmaster.

Esther Gould's Book Corner

JUST PARAGRAPHS

Ernest Elmo Calkins, perhaps as famous for his articles on deafness which appeared in the Atlantic several years ago as for his distinguished work in advertising, has written a book "Business the Civilizer." In it he demonstrates what most of us would be amazed to know that without advertising our whole civilization would be impossible, the post would not come to our door, the automobile would not leave it.

The first available copy of the special edition of Commander Byrd's book "Skyward" was delivered in a novel manner. The head of the publishing house took it to Miller Field, Staten Island, where it was handed over to the late Floyd Bennett, Byrd's pilot, who hopped off in the Bellanca for Detroit where he handed the copy to Edsel Ford. In each copy of this special edition is incorporated a bit of the fabric of the plane in which Byrd flew over the North Pole.

MILT GROSS IN GOOD FORM

"FAMOUS FIMMALES WITT ODDER EWENTS FROM HEESTORY" By Milt Gross Doubleday Doran & Co.

Milt Gross's titles speak for themselves. So do his illustrations. The picture of a lovely Eve reclining in the garden while the serpent, wearing a flattened derby, tries to sell her his wares from a huckster's wagon marked "hepples" is enough to suggest the possibilities with which his subject is rife. And he makes the most of the possibilities.

AGAIN EVE

"LADIES IN HADES" By Frederick Arnold Kummer J. H. Sears & Co.

"Ladies in Hades, a story of Hell's Smart Set" by Frederic Arnold Kummer, is something else again. Witty, sophisticated, with a humor which is often broad enough to reach quite off the page, it yet manages to keep you amused by telling you of that overworked character, our ancestor Eve. To be sure, her other recent biographers have shown her in her familiar rural surroundings in which we are naturally tired of her by this time while Mr. Kummer shows her in the abode, the inevitable consequence of her life, Hell. He opens, "Eve had been terribly bored with Hell for quite a while, she told her friends, which was perhaps only natural, since she had been there longer than anyone else."

So this being the case Eve did what most women would do under the circumstances, she founded a club. Her club was, as usual, made up of others as bored as herself, but as the sum of many boredoms has turned out to be not one big boredom, but a decreased boredom, they got on very well.

The members of the club being the great artists in the only art which Eve thought was the sphere of woman, love, they decided to spend their evenings regaling each other with their experiences along that line. The result is a book exceedingly amusing, the humor broad as we have already said, and also sharp, some of the best points of which are the use of modern slang in its proper setting, as when Satan says, "Not until this place freezes over."

In "The Son" Hildur Dixelius has written another of those sagas of the Scandinavian country, a sequel to her "The Minister's Daughter." The scene as in that book is laid in the small barren villages of Sweden one hundred years ago. It has the simplicity which was inherent in the lives of those people, the simplicity and the mystic faith.

Sara Alelia who figured in Mrs. Dixelius' earlier book now has a son, Erik Anton, who is the central figure of this one. As a little boy Erik Anton is sent to a distant school and then to the university to fit himself for that only calling which seemed to their deeply religious natures entirely worthy, the ministry. This is the story of Erik Anton's education, his boyhood friendships, love, and the accomplishing of his work.

This is one of those books which move smoothly and sadly, too, in the stately and sad motion of life in that early time in primitive barren lands.

Taken from an old legend current in England this book tells how a youth, Trevy, born on the banks of a tempestuous river, takes not only its name but its characteristics also. It is written in beautiful prose.
