SCHOOLS OF COMMERCE MUST GIVE TRAINING

Northwestern Professor Says Not Sufficient That They Aid Salary Boost
Schools of commerce in universities cannot be justified simply because they enable graduates to command higher salaries, Dean Ralph E. Heilman of the school of commerce of Northwestern university, declared recently at the opening session of the American Association of Collegiate Schools of Business at the Drake hotel.
"Probably schools of commerce can reasonably be expected to accomplish this purpose," he said, "but the justification for their existence must rest on a much larger and broader basis. The existence of such schools and the expenditure of large amounts of money for their maintenance both in public and private institutions is justified only as such training makes a contribution toward the increase of the productive capacity of society, toward the equitable distribution of the products of industry, to promoting equality of economic opportunity and to the establishment of standards of business ethics.
"Schools of commerce must train men effectively for executive responsibilities in business, for responsibilities as business technicians, experts and specialists, and for the responsibilities of proprietorship and ownership. If our schools of commerce accomplish these big purposes, as we believe they are doing, they are making a significant and notable contribution to social progress and economic welfare."
HOLDS CLERGYMEN'S CARS ARE TAXABLE
Attorney General Oscar E. Carlstrom has given an opinion to State's Attorney H. E. Fullenwider of Sangamon county in which he told that automobiles of priests, ministers, Salvation Army officers and Rescue home officials are subject to taxation. The question was put up to an assessor in Springfield and a ruling was requested by Mr. Fullenwider.
