TRAPPING OF FUR ANIMALS OLD TRADE

BEGAN IN THE STONE AGE

Demand Still Exceeds Supply and Muskrat One of Most Popular Pelts; How They Are Raised

Man has been engaged in the trapping of fur bearing animals since the early ages. The women of the stone age wore furs as clothing, the modern women wear furs not alone because of its warmth but for its beauty and their personal adornment. Trappers spurred by high prices have ruthlessly depleted the wild supply. The drainage and reclamation of swamp lands have destroyed the breeding grounds of millions of muskrats.

So if we are to have dependable supply of fur they must be raised. Statistics compiled by Frank G. Ashbrook of the U. S. biological survey shows that the muskrat is the most important of all fur bearers. More than 50 per cent of all fur used today is muskrat. His glossy pelt is not only used in its natural state, but when dyed is sold as Hudson seal, river mink, southern beaver, neutria, otter, sable and many other popular furs.

Demand Is Heavy

For the past few years the demand for muskrat pelts has exceeded the supply by from 15 to 20 million pelts. The result of this demand has prompted the commercial raising of this little fur bearer, by some of our largest manufacturing furriers and far-sighted individuals. Muskrat farming is a business the same as banking, manufacturing or mining. It is as practical as the raising of sheep, cattle or hogs, the difference being that it is from five to ten times as profitable.

To successfully raise muskrats one must have a spring-fed marshy swamp with an outlet which can be dammed, so that a uniform water level may be maintained. The depth of the water and musk, or floating bog, must be sufficient so that it will not freeze to the bottom in the most severe winter, the result of which would be cutting off of the food supply and the starvation of the animals, unless artificially fed. The swamp lands must abound in the natural foods of the muskrat such as cat-swamp bulrushes, duck millet, three blade grass, wild rice wapato, and wild celery. The location must also have high dry ground surrounding the swamp on which fences are built.

Proper Fencing

Proper fencing is of the utmost importance. Sixteen-gauge galvanized wire six feet wide of one-inch mesh should be sunk well into the dry hard ground, about two feet, that part which is above the ground should be bordered at the top with a wide band of galvanized sheet steel, this not only affords the muskrat protection from his enemies such as the minks, weasels, and others, but confines him within the enclosure. Should an attempt to climb the fence be made by the muskrat or his enemies they find it impossible to obtain a foothold when the smooth steel is reached. The smart rancher rids his waters of the carnivorous fish and turtles, also insures protection against the crows, hawks and owls, all of which prey upon the young muskrats.

A crop of root vegetables such as carrots, parsnips, and sugar beets should be planted, stored in root cellars and fed during the winter months, by using feeding houses. On ranches where the muskrats are in the habit of using the feeding houses, the breeding season, which results in a larger number of young litters. We have proved this to our own satisfaction. Another decided advantage of feeding houses is the ability to easily catch the animals. Trap doors are over the entrances, by closing them when one wishes to make a catch the muskrat cannot escape. This enables the rancher to market only prime prices. Number one prime muskrat pelts today are selling as high as $4.25 on the New York markets.

EDUCATION PREVENTIVE OF ACCIDENTS SHOWN

Survey by Government Bureau Quited to Indicate Truth of Statement

That education as a preventive of accidents is being accepted everywhere, is shown by a bulletin recently received by the accident prevention department of the Chicago Motor club which says that safety education in the school of Honolulu has been so effective that not a single child has been fatally injured near a public school during the past six years.

The bulletin points out that: "The bureau of education, department of the interior, explains that about 350 junior police officers guard street intersections in the vicinity of the school buildings, and that in addition, practical safety lessons are given daily in the primary grades. A local newspaper publishes a safety lesson each week which may be used in school instruction. The board of education co-operates with other departments, and some thousand pupils listened to accident prevention talks in public school assemblies which were attended by the sheriff and other public officials."

"Long-Profit" Tires are Short-Mileage Tires That is why we never sell them

A "long-profit" tire is a tire of little or no merit or reputation on which the dealer gets an extra 5, 10 or 15 per cent profit. But, the customer doesn't get that in extra mileage—and doesn't come back.

That's not good business. And for that reason we never sell "long-profit" tires. We plan to hold our customers on value rather than on promises.

We Sell Extra Mileage

The tires we sell are Goodyears. And we're proud of it. Because Goodyear means leadership in tire design, construction, appearance and mileage, as evidenced by the fact that for ten years people have bought more Goodyears than any other kind.

On an extra mileage basis and cost-per-mile basis "bargain" tires and "long-profit" tires can never compete with Goodyears. Mileage is the only determining cost factor... That's why we sell Goodyears. Ask twenty-five friends their experience with tires. Look at the new cars. Why such a preponderant Goodyear preference? Again, mileage.

Good Business Logic

We want your tire business; but only on a good-business basis. We believe in the axiom that "the business that stays is the business that pays."

That's only good business logic. We help ourselves by helping you. And to help both we've got to have the right tire. That's why we sell Goodyears.

And, please don't feel that because Goodyears are high in quality they are high in price. Honest prices for extra mileage.
