SIGNIFICANT WORDS

Calvin Coolidge may not be a Webster in oratory nor a Calhoun in rhetoric, but from his tight lips there springs occasionally a phrase worth repetition. Speaking before the Daughters of the American Revolution in Washington recently he observed that "If the people are to remain politically free they must be economically free. Their only hope in that direction is for them to keep their own business in their own hands." These sentences are not dressed for a parade, but they mean something, says The Independent. They carry the President's conviction that the government must not set itself up in concerns which rightfully belong to private enterprise, that Washington must never be turned into the center of a bureaucracy which meddles in everything from coal mining to the raising of fancy poultry.

Mr. Coolidge explained that government management of enterprises did not always make for efficiency or prosperity. "When business is in private hands," he told the militant Daughters, "it is expected to be run for the benefit of the owners. When the government steps in, the purchasers, users and beneficiaries of what the government undertakes to supply insist that the concern should be conducted for their benefit. It does not eliminate selfishness; it simply transfers it in part from the seller to the purchasers. Under these conditions it ceases to be a real business, becomes lacking in enterprise and initiative, and does not have any motive to provide improved service."

BILLIONS OF PENNIES

What becomes of the pennies? Who uses them nowadays, in these times of high prices? Why are they coined? These questions are asked frequently by people to whom the nickel is the least denominator in the economic problem. The answer is not far to seek. Millions of pennies are spent daily in the purchase of newspapers. That is one use to which the little brown coin is put. And Uncle Sam does a large business in retail stamp selling at one and two cents each. But there is another use that calls for an immense volume of this form of money. According to a report just issued by the General Vending Corporation, which maintains slot machines all over the country for the sale of chewing gum, candy and other small package goods, no less than three and a half billion pennies passed through its machines in 1927. It is now estimated by the Treasury Department, note is made in this connection, that about 4,721,187,900 pennies are in circulation. Hence, in view of the various functions of the penny in daily trade, it is obvious that the same coins pass through the machine slots more than once during the year. It would seem, therefore, that the penny is one of the most actively circulating mediums of exchange in this country. Those who a few years ago protested that the placing of the head of Abraham Lincoln on the penny was not in keeping with his place in the hearts of the people, may be comforted by the assurance which these figures give that the little Lincoln coin is by no means a negligible quantity of American specie.

We had a very splendid school, the enrollment being 45 and an average daily attendance of 31. Six teachers devoted their time and talents to this work. The Standard Daily Vacation Bible school course was used. For our craft work the children made baskets and furniture of art fibre cord. Very beautiful things were exhibited on the closing night, some of which were seven end tables, three foot stools, two book racks, one bed room box seat, four waste paper baskets, one magazine rack, one sandwich tray, one magazine basket, two ferneries, two telephone table and chair sets and twenty-seven small baskets.

The people demand candidates who are free from political entanglements, but if so they probably won't stand without hitching.
The complaint is made that the laws must have more teeth in them, but they won't do much good unless they are wisdom teeth.
