TO ESTABLISH FISH HATCHERY, DES PLAINES

Izaak Walton League to Plant Thousands of Spawn in That River

Some day in the next five years the Des Plaines river and other nearby waters will be a fisherman's paradise, because hundreds of thousands of fish will be planted there by the Izaak Walton council of Cook county.

This is the good news for anglers involved in the action of the Cook county forest preserve in turning over to the Izaak Walton league the twelve acre section of the preserve known as the Jefferson estate. It is situated about a mile and a half south of Des Plaines and has water frontage on the Des Plaines river with some low-lying muck land that is ideal for fish hatcheries.

A twenty-room house on the property will be fitted out as a home for Waltonians where conclaves of some 1,000 members will work out the big designs planned with the taking over of the property. The Izaak Walton Council is made up of members of all Izaak Walton league chapters in this territory.

A fish hatchery similar to that which the local Waltonians of Winona and Hennepin counties, Minnesota, have established will be developed on the river front at Des Plaines.
