

Little Chance for City Airport Bill to Pass This Time

Little hope is held for the passage of the measure pending in the state legislature which cites the right to levy for the construction and maintenance of airports, according to those who have been sounding out sentiment of the state assembly. The bill is of especial interest in Lake county and local enthusiasts were among those who sponsored the introduction of such a measure.

Passage of the bill would enable a city administration to levy a small tax which would eventually reach a sum sufficient to meet the cost of establishment of an airport.

Sentiment of the state assembly on the bill was determined by Major Reed Landis, president of the Chicago Aero commission, after he had returned from Springfield where he appeared before the committee considering the bill. Opposition seems to be based on the fact that Chicago needs funds through passage of the measure to carry out uncompleted airport plans.

Maj. Landis reports that the committee turned a cold shoulder on the bill, which would provide a half mill tax for airport purposes. He was given the impression, he said, that legislators believe the Chicago airport problem strictly a local one to be solved by the city council. It was also indicated that the bill would fail because of the general opposition to any measure increasing Chicago's taxing powers.

Meanwhile members of the Chicago area commission plan to appear at next meeting of the council and urge an immediate appropriation for completing the municipal airport to relieve the present congestion.

The farm population is said to be the smallest for many years, but the trouble may not be so much the lack of demand for their products as the distance from the movie shows.
