The hope of extinguishing the blaze soon vanished. All water-connections in the stable were frozen up and there were no chemical extinguishers. We tried to beat out the flames, but owing to the location above it proved impossible.

By the time we decided to abandon the building the fire had spread to the dressing-room, and we could save nothing but a few things, that were standing around the stage. Jim Cooper managed to rescue the barge and I got out with the papier-mache statue of myself. No one was hurt.

We stood, a disconsolate array, watching while the barn burned. There seemed no one to blame for the occurrence of the fire, which had doubtless been caused by defective insulation in the electric wiring. As we had not put that in ourselves, there seemed no reason why we should be considered at fault.

"It's all for the best," said Maryella brightly. "I didn't know my lines in the last act anyway."

Jim Cooper was standing dejectedly with the handle of the barge in his hand. The padding which was supposed to be on his chest had settled down once more and he had moved it around in back of him out of the way. It was a curious-looking place for one's chest.

"I suppose it is all for the best," he said, "but I wish I had been able to save my clothes. The Greeks must have designed this costume of mine for summer weather."

"If you're cold," I said, "think of me!"

"I suppose everybody thinks I started that fire," complained the voice of Comrade Henwether. "But I didn't. The way I get blamed for everything that happens around here ought to be reported to the President of the United States!"

CHAPTER VI.

Jogging Back

The light snow which had been falling all day had been succeeded by a heavier precipitation. The air was thick with falling flakes that loomed black as they dropped between us and the blazing stable. As the fire burned itself out we became more keenly aware of the cold and at Colonel Stewart's invitation we returned to the main building of the Home to get warm.

We made a fine motley picture with our combination of Greeks and old soldiers, to say nothing of myself in white tights and white-face makeup.

"The stable was fully insured," Colonel Stewart assured us, "and we never kept horses in it anyway."
