

Wins $5 Prize in Quotation Contest

John Derby won a five dollar prize in a contest on quotations which is being sponsored by the Chicago Tribune, last Sunday with the following contribution:

Quotation—By God, Sir Earl, you'll either go or hang.

Answer—Toward the close of the 13th century King Edward I. of England, who reigned from 1272 to 1307, was preparing for war with France. He had been engaged in a war with the Scotch which had depleted his treasury, and he used various means to raise money for his French campaign. The heaviest taxes were laid on the church. The export duty on wool was raised to six times its former amount.

The barons resisted this, and the earl of Norfolk was one of the leaders of the resistance. Edward asked him to lead an army to Gascony, which he refused to do. "By God, Sir Earl, you'll either go or hang," said Edward. "By God, Sir King, I'll neither go nor hang," was the cool reply, and the king was powerless to do anything to the haughty nobleman.—John Derby, P. O. Box 484, Deerfield, Ill.

Quotation—Reduce taxation before taxation reduces us.
