Hats grow on trees in parts of South America. The spathes, or sheaths for the efflorescence of the "monkey cap" or trolees palm tree are shaped much like the hats worn by French peasants in past times. They grow in sizes which fit average men's heads, and are serviceable as hats for natives. Examples of them are on exhibition in the department of botany at Field Museum of Natural History.

The poet said he shot an arrow into the air, but he couldn't do that around here now, as the neighbors would say it would come down on their heads.

The people of this city are urged to put their best foot forward, but they should do something besides kicking with it.

ESTHER GOULD'S TRAVEL CORNER

LAST DAYS

London is certainly not of a vituperative disposition. After all the unkind things that are always being said about her weather by visitors from our side of the water, she has given us Heavenly day after Heavenly day. The umbrella, overworked, alas, in Paris, has been taking a well earned rest.

Quite apart from her weather conditions London has been fun. Visiting Rebecca West is more fun than anything I did in Europe in spite of, or perhaps partly because of, the fact that it resembles sitting on the edge of a volcano. Something extraordinary is always either happening or about to happen.

It was Carl Van Vechten who really divulged to me, however, the secret of the danger I was in. He said, "Are you staying with Rebecca West?" I admitted rather proudly that I was. He said, "It must be exciting. Do you know that she's the one person in London the police won't allow to have her address in the telephone book?" I hadn't heard it. He went on to explain that so many cranks, maniacs and radicals, including, he insisted, the Shah of Persia, were always turning up on the mat and having to be removed by the police that finally they said it was getting too brisk for them and would Miss West mind removing her address from the telephone book?

This knowledge gave, of course, an added zest to life. To know that you are living behind not only that indefinable chasm which separates from us mortals the great of this earth, but also behind an actual chasm symbolized by the blank spaces between name and number in the telephone book!

G. B. Stern is one of the most amusing people in London. We used to drop in to her flat in the famous Albany, the oldest flat building in London, where Macaulay, Thackeray, and almost everyone else has once lived, and be regarded by her stories of "Mrs. Pat," the great Mrs. Patrick Campbell who is playing in Miss Stern's play, "The Matriarch." She and John Van Druten, who made the stage version of the book, also had much of an amusing nature to say about the press notices.

Although England was in the throes of a general election during my last days there, there was little evidence of it, except one time when I happened to get off a train with the then Premier Baldwin. I noticed the crowd and was just wondering if they were there to meet me, when an English Bobby stepped up and asked me if I would please move on. I looked around, then, and discovered that I was part of the intimate family party of the Premier, and was getting some ill-deserved acclaim. I told the Bobby I would be charmed to move on if he'd show me a way through the crowd, which he did thankfully, depositing me in a taxi. I drove on making mental comments on what a pitiless thing is fame. I suppose by this time, however, the crowds are not following Baldwin.

At last after nine beautiful days in London there was the necessity of journeying home. Bringing to an end this lighthearted pilgrimage, which has been so full of rewards at every stop. The ship has been very quiet on the voyage. Coming home is necessarily quiet compared to the voyage out. Everyone is a little tired and so full of impressions that they like to sit bovinely on the deck and ruminate on things seen in Spain, Africa, Italy, France, England. We all read "Dodsworth" and I think felt ourselves perhaps, more in sympathy with him than with any other of Mr. Lewis' characters, because we are all a little like Dodsworth, we Americans who go to Europe. Blundering about more or less blindly, enjoying it hugely, but all the time a little troubled by the effort to figure out what they all mean, these civilizations so foreign to our own, what they have really to do with us.

Two RAYMOND-WHITCOMB

NORTH CAPE-BALTIC SUMMER CRUISES

S.S. "Carinthia" -- June 26
S.S. "Franconia" -- June 29

Raymond-Whitcomb North Cape Cruises for almost ten years have been the most popular Summer Cruises to sail from America. This year there will be TWO Raymond-Whitcomb Summer Cruises to the Land of the Midnight Sun.

The cruise-ships will be sister-ships—the newest Cunarders—specially designed for cruising. Sailing just after the close of schools and colleges, these cruises have consistently attracted younger people and families bound for a vacation together. They may be taken as a complete holiday in themselves (generous shore excursions characterize the programs) or as a delightful new way to Paris.

The routes include Iceland, the North Cape and Hammerfest, Trondhjem, the most beautiful of the Norwegian Fjords and the cities of Scandinavia and the Baltic—Bergen, Oslo, Stockholm, Visby, Tallinn (Esthonian capital), Helsingfors (capital of Finland) and Copenhagen.

The rates—$800 up—include assured homeward accommodations by such noted Cunard liners as the "Aquitania", "Berengaria" and "Mauretania" as well as the "Carinthia" and "Franconia".
