NOTABLE COLLECTION OF CHINESE CURIOS

Cups Made of Rhinoceros Horn Displayed in Field Museum Described

A remarkable collection of Chicago cups carved from rhinoceros horn, and once believed capable of detecting and neutralizing poison which might be served in drinks tendered by one's enemies, is on exhibition at Field Museum of Natural History.

The ancient Chinese were acquainted with two species of rhinoceros, the single-horned and the double-horned, which became extinct in China in early historical times, according to Dr. Berthold Laufer, curator of anthropology.

Valuable Collection The Field Museum collection includes cups ranging from the Ming dynasty (1368-1643) to the manchu dynasty (1644-1911).

Rhinoceros horn is admirably adapted to artistic use. In many of the cups the shape and design of ancient bronze and jade vessels are reproduced.
