

Evangelical Bungalow Church
Rev. A. P. Johnson, minister

We welcome you to our Rally Day service next Sunday. Some autos "go" some autos "stop." At the signal flash of the courteous "cop."

Our Sunday school is exactly so: If you'll come and stop the school will go.

Help us reach our goal. "Every seat filled by 9:45 o'clock." A good program awaits you.

Sunday evening at 8:00 the Summer Sojourners club will report on their vacations. Each member of this club will tell us where they attended church while on their vacation and what impressed them most.

We invite you to worship with us.

Next Sunday morning Rev. Joseph Taylor, a great favorite with our people will occupy the pulpit, the pastor being away at conference. Mr. Taylor always brings a warm, vital message and our people will miss a real blessing if they fail to hear him.

The ninetieth annual session of our Rock River conference is being held at Downers Grove this week. Bishop Waldorf presides. About 1,000 ministers and laymen will be in attendance during the week. The Laymen's association meets on Friday. The various sessions are open to the public and the evening sessions are especially interesting, being given over to anniversaries of the various boards with splendid addresses by some of the ablest leaders of the church at large. The Women's Missionary societies have their special program Friday afternoon. Several of our people plan to attend one or more sessions. Bishop Waldorf preaches next Sunday morning and conducts the ordination service for deacons and elders in the afternoon.

Mr. Keith Kuhlman has been elected treasurer of the Sunday school. The name of Mrs. Sarah Laegeler as superintendent of Mite Boxes, was omitted from the list of officers of the Missionary society last week and Mrs. Julia Evans should have been listed as financial secretary of the Ladies' aid. The various officers of the Sunday school, Ladies' aid and Missionary society were publicly installed by the pastor at the morning service last Sunday. These organizations are entering the new church year beginning October 1, with enthusiasm and fine prospects for the work of each.

The rummage sale held last week by the Ladies' aid resulted in an unexpectedly large sum being realized which enabled the ladies to pay off a small debt they had and enter the year with no financial burden upon them.

Girl Scouts

Troop 3 of Lincoln school had their first meeting of the year last Thursday afternoon in the auditorium of the school. Louise Aldridge and Alice Young were invested as second class scouts and Maxine Bloomquist, Ethel Ohrmund, Joan Cier, Cathi Jane Shelton and Eileen Glen as tenderfoots. Some of the girls received their Second Class badges while at Camp Hickory Hill near Edgerton, Wis., this summer. Kathaine Johnston, Mary Lu Sanborn and Carolan Coale were these girls and also received honors in craftsman and nature. Katherine Johnston passed her life savings test while at camp.

Mrs. W. H. Algers gave a most interesting talk on her scout work during the war in Washington. Mrs. Algers is the high school captain this year.

The rest of the afternoon was passed in games and singing songs learned at camp.

Troop 4 Elm Place Scouts

The troop was organized into three patrols with the following girls as leaders: Joan Greenebaum, Barbara Frank and Joan Goodman. Several games were played and the scout laws and promise reviewed.

A representative group of freshmen girls met with Mrs. Hutton at the Y.W.C.A. Monday afternoon to discuss plans for a freshmen party to be given for all girls of the freshmen class at Deerfield-Shields after school Monday, October 7. There will be dancing, bunco, relay races, games and refreshments. Appoint yourself a committee of one to see that you get to the party. "A cyclone of enthusiasm, followed by showers of laughter from a satisfied freshman group."

Alien Propaganda Most to Be Feared

There is no excuse to be offered for Wm. B. Shearer and the American ship-building companies which employed him, if, as is charged, Shearer went to Geneva to interfere with a program of international disarmament in behalf of business concerns which hope to profit by the construction of additional warships. There is reason to believe that the influence exerted by Shearer at Geneva and elsewhere has been greatly exaggerated, however, and that he was but a small drop in the bucket of propaganda at the Geneva conference and in the discussion of the questions of national defense and naval parity. There is also reason to believe that Shearer's propaganda, however selfish in its origin, is far less menacing to the country than the vast volume of propaganda, of both foreign and domestic origin, with which this country has been flooded during the last few years in a highly financed and heavily organized effort to break down resistance in the United States to efforts of alien inspiration to sacrifice just American interests to foreign desires. This, after all, is the sort of propaganda which Americans

EMOTIONAL BENEFIT OF COLLEGE COURSE

Writer Points Out Some of Its Intangible But Prized Features

"I am sorry I did not go to college for four years and graduate," confesses Dorothy Dow in College Humor. "And that is why, if I ever have a daughter, I will send her to college whether she wants to go or not. Whether she needs it or not. I will send her to college because if I do not, I know that some day she will wish she had gone."

"I didn't feel at all this way about it at seventeen. I was not particularly interested in it. I had read too many books, and I had spent too much time with older people, and I thought my sisters' friends were silly, and I thought sororities were absurd. I was quite sure that there was nothing college could give me that I could not get in some other way."

Knows Better Now

"If I had to do it over again, I would not feel like that. I am old enough now to know that the things you get from college may not be the things you study in the classroom, but they are infinitely important, nevertheless. Intangible things, absurd things, if you like to consider them so. Friendships, loyalties, sentimentalities—the lovely, lacy fringes of life."

"The possessive feeling, the lump in one's throat. Red balloons floating across the gray of an October sky. Rushing dates. Cutting classes. Old stone buildings, young green grass. Youth, thrust together, sharing all the brief loveliness of youth. When I stand in the grandstand and listen to the boys sing 'Hail to the Orange,' I wish that were my song. When I listen to them sing 'On Wisconsin,' I wish that were my song, too."

Second Home

"College is the nearest things to a second home that anyone is liable to get. A second home, a second family, memories that lie dormant to wake at the sight of a face come upon suddenly in a city street, or a nickname uttered after years of silence. There is no group of people in the world whom I feel as my sister feels about her sorority sisters. There is no place in the world about which I feel as my mother feels about South Hadley. There is no memory which I can put into words which will match the memory of any of my friends who happen to say, 'When I was at school—'."

"The record of three or four years at the state university will give you and the woman who has just moved into the apartment next door some mutual interest to talk about. Sororities are as good for making conversation as babies, and not half as much trouble. If to the 'What college?' you can reply, 'Mt Holyoke, nineteen, hundred and twenty-two,' your questioner will take it for granted you are cultured, even if you say 'ain't' or 'What the hell?'"

Guide-Lecture Tours at Museum Open Oct. 7
