NEW SHERIDAN ROAD BRIDGES FINISHED

voters, however, decided against the issue and, under the law, the question could not again be brought up for six months.

The city then turned to the county supervisors and the state for help, arguing that Sheridan road being one of the principal and most attractive state highways leading out of Chicago, that over four miles of it lie within our city limits, and that this city had already spent over $300,000 on it's construction while the great bulk of the traffic is from the outside, the state could properly build these bridges.

After months of negotiation the state highway authorities finally agreed to this, and in the course of time the contract for the south bridge was let and construction commenced.

North Bridge

There was some hesitancy regarding the north bridge, however, as the state highway commissioners were not satisfied with the condition of Sheridan road between this bridge and Fort Sheridan which has four right angled turns between there and the reservation. An understanding was arrived at with the present administration that this portion of the road would be straightened out and the state signed the contract for the second bridge.

This straightening of the road at the north end presents many difficulties and may require some time to accomplish and, no doubt, it will be done, but with the finishing of the bridges Sheridan road is again open.

The state authorities promise to put the routing numbers back at once relieving narrow St. Johns avenue of the heavy traffic that has been forced that way for such a long time.

"My first one-man exhibit at Chester Johnson Gallery in 1925. The following year invited to have exhibition at Whitney Gallery in New York.

"My best known piece—a satire called "Promenade" and nicknamed The Flapper, purchased by Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney and a replica recently acquired by The Pierce Arrow company in Chicago for their salesroom. Known for my portraits of well known poets, novelists, musicians, and painters and recently portraits of Mr. Waller Borden and Chauncey Blair.

"Am a professional member of the Arts club and a director of the No Jury society of Chicago.

The title of my lecture is Modern Sculpture. The trend of my talk will not be to defend modern art for it needs no defense, but to explain simply the influences that have brought about the break from tradition. I will use lantern slides of some of the best known European and American modernists."

Current Events, Citizenship and Parliamentary Law.

Current Events Talk

An interested group of women attended the first meeting in the course of talks on Current Events, Citizenship and Parliamentary Law, given by Mrs. Maurice Lieber, and sponsored by the committee on education in the Highland Park Woman's club. Mrs. Arthur Raff, chairman of the committee welcomed the members in a brief greeting, and then turned over the meeting into Mrs. Lieber's capable hands.

Mrs. Lieber gave a short resume of the principal events of national and international importance that had occurred during the summer, stressing the flight of the Zeppelin and Ramsey MacDonald's visit to this country as two splendid examples of the spirit of good will that seems to be uniting the various nations.

She also mentioned the appropriation of over $4,000,000 by Congress for the purpose of exterminating the mediterranean fly from Florida, where the insect was destroying the fruit crop. Fortunately the fly has been exterminated, and Florida can again export its fruit and resume its enormous income from this source.

Mrs. Lieber mentioned the safety convention now in session at the Stevens hotel, and told of the appalling number of deaths and crippled conditions resulting from accidents that are preventable.

Twenty minutes at the conclusion of the lesson was given over to a Parliamentary Law drill, which was thoroughly enjoyed by the members of the class.

The members are eagerly awaiting the next meeting which will take place Friday, October 18, at 10:00 a.m., at the Highland Park Woman's club, when Mrs. Lieber, in her interesting manner will speak on "Charters of Americanism."
