There are shades on the fen, ghosts of women and men,
Who have sinned and have died, but are living again,
O'er the waters they tread, with their lanterns of dread,
And they peer in the pools—in the pools of the dead.
Where the wind is a watchman along the dark moor,
And the reeds are bent over with green mud and gore.
There against the pitch-darkness, with small lantern light,
O'er the grotesque old fenmen—who dance in the night.

Where the drums of the heavens sounding their call,
Where the lurid white lightning, f shows every wall.
There the mist and the rain cloud lanterns of dread
Where they peer in the pools—in the pools of the dead.
They are spectres, not men, who out on the fen,
And their high, wailing cries seem shatter the skies.
For I know in my heart, that I not depart
While they peer in the pools In the pools of the dead.

Our Day at the Lake
We loved to hear the breaking waves
And to see the white caps dash
Against the pier
We loved to hear
The lake thundering and crashing
The leaves were the colors of summer's hue
The lake was the color of deep blue,
And the summer's wind
Was so soft and warm
It looked as if there could be storm.
We had a great big crackling fire
And the boys gathered wood to heart's desire,
We held out our sticks
With marshmallows white
Mmm! they were good, and oh light.

As we walked upon the cobblestones
We sang in our softest tones
The rhymes we had learned to do
That was the end of a perfect
When we went to the beach and our play.

Elm Place Defeats Glencoe 20 to 0
Last Friday, Nov. 8, Elm Place defeated the Central school team Glencoe by a score of 20-0 at the school field. The score is no indication of the battle, as both teams rather evenly matched and both played exceptionally well. Several Glencoe had possession of the ball scoring positions, but on each occasion the Elm Place forward wall held their trusts. The Glencoe field, although they outweighed Elm Place ball carriers, were unable to cope with adversity of their opponents and succumbed to the Elm Place players after three touchdowns and a point after touchdown had scored against them. Great credit due to the Elm Place line, which exhibited an excellent brand of football against a heavier bunch of opponents. The victorious team has arranged for a return game at Glencoe on November 15, and needless to say they hope to return victors again.
