

"June Moon" Promises to Be Big Success

That highly successful theatrical producer, Sam H. Harris, is presenting at the Selwyn theatre, Chicago, "June Moon," which has been unanimously declared by all Chicago critics as the funniest, smartest and wittiest play that has been seen in the Windy City for many a day.

The book of "June Moon" was written by two of America's best known humorists and playwrights, viz, Ring Lardner of "You Know Me, Al" fame and George S. Kaufman, dramatic editor of the New York Times and the most successful author of stage plays of the present day.

Last September Mr. Harris formed a company of "June Moon" and opened it at the Broadhurst theatre in New York, where it clicked from the start and ever since capacity houses have ruled.

The story of "June Moon" is redundant with human interest, with countless laughs and an occasional tear and for those who enjoy infectious humor of the sparkling variety, "June Moon" is heartily recommended to all lovers of the theatre. When the company in New York had been stamped by both critic and public as an enormous success, both from a financial as well as an entertainment of rare pleasure, Mr. Harris, the producer, formed a company for Chicago consumption, securing a cast of players that fit their respective roles with a glove-like nicety and which includes: James Spottswood, who last appeared in Chicago in "Excess Baggage"; Edith Arnold, last season with Richard Bennett in "Jarnegan"; Edward Woods, who has appeared in Chicago in "Cradle Snatchers," "The Spider" and "Broadway"; Edith Van Cleve, who was with Jane Cowl in "Smilin' Thru"; Ruth Holden, last appearing in Chicago in support of George Jessel in "The Jazz Singer"; John Daly Murphy, Ross Hertz, Harold Grau, Cyrena Smith and Beatrice Powers.

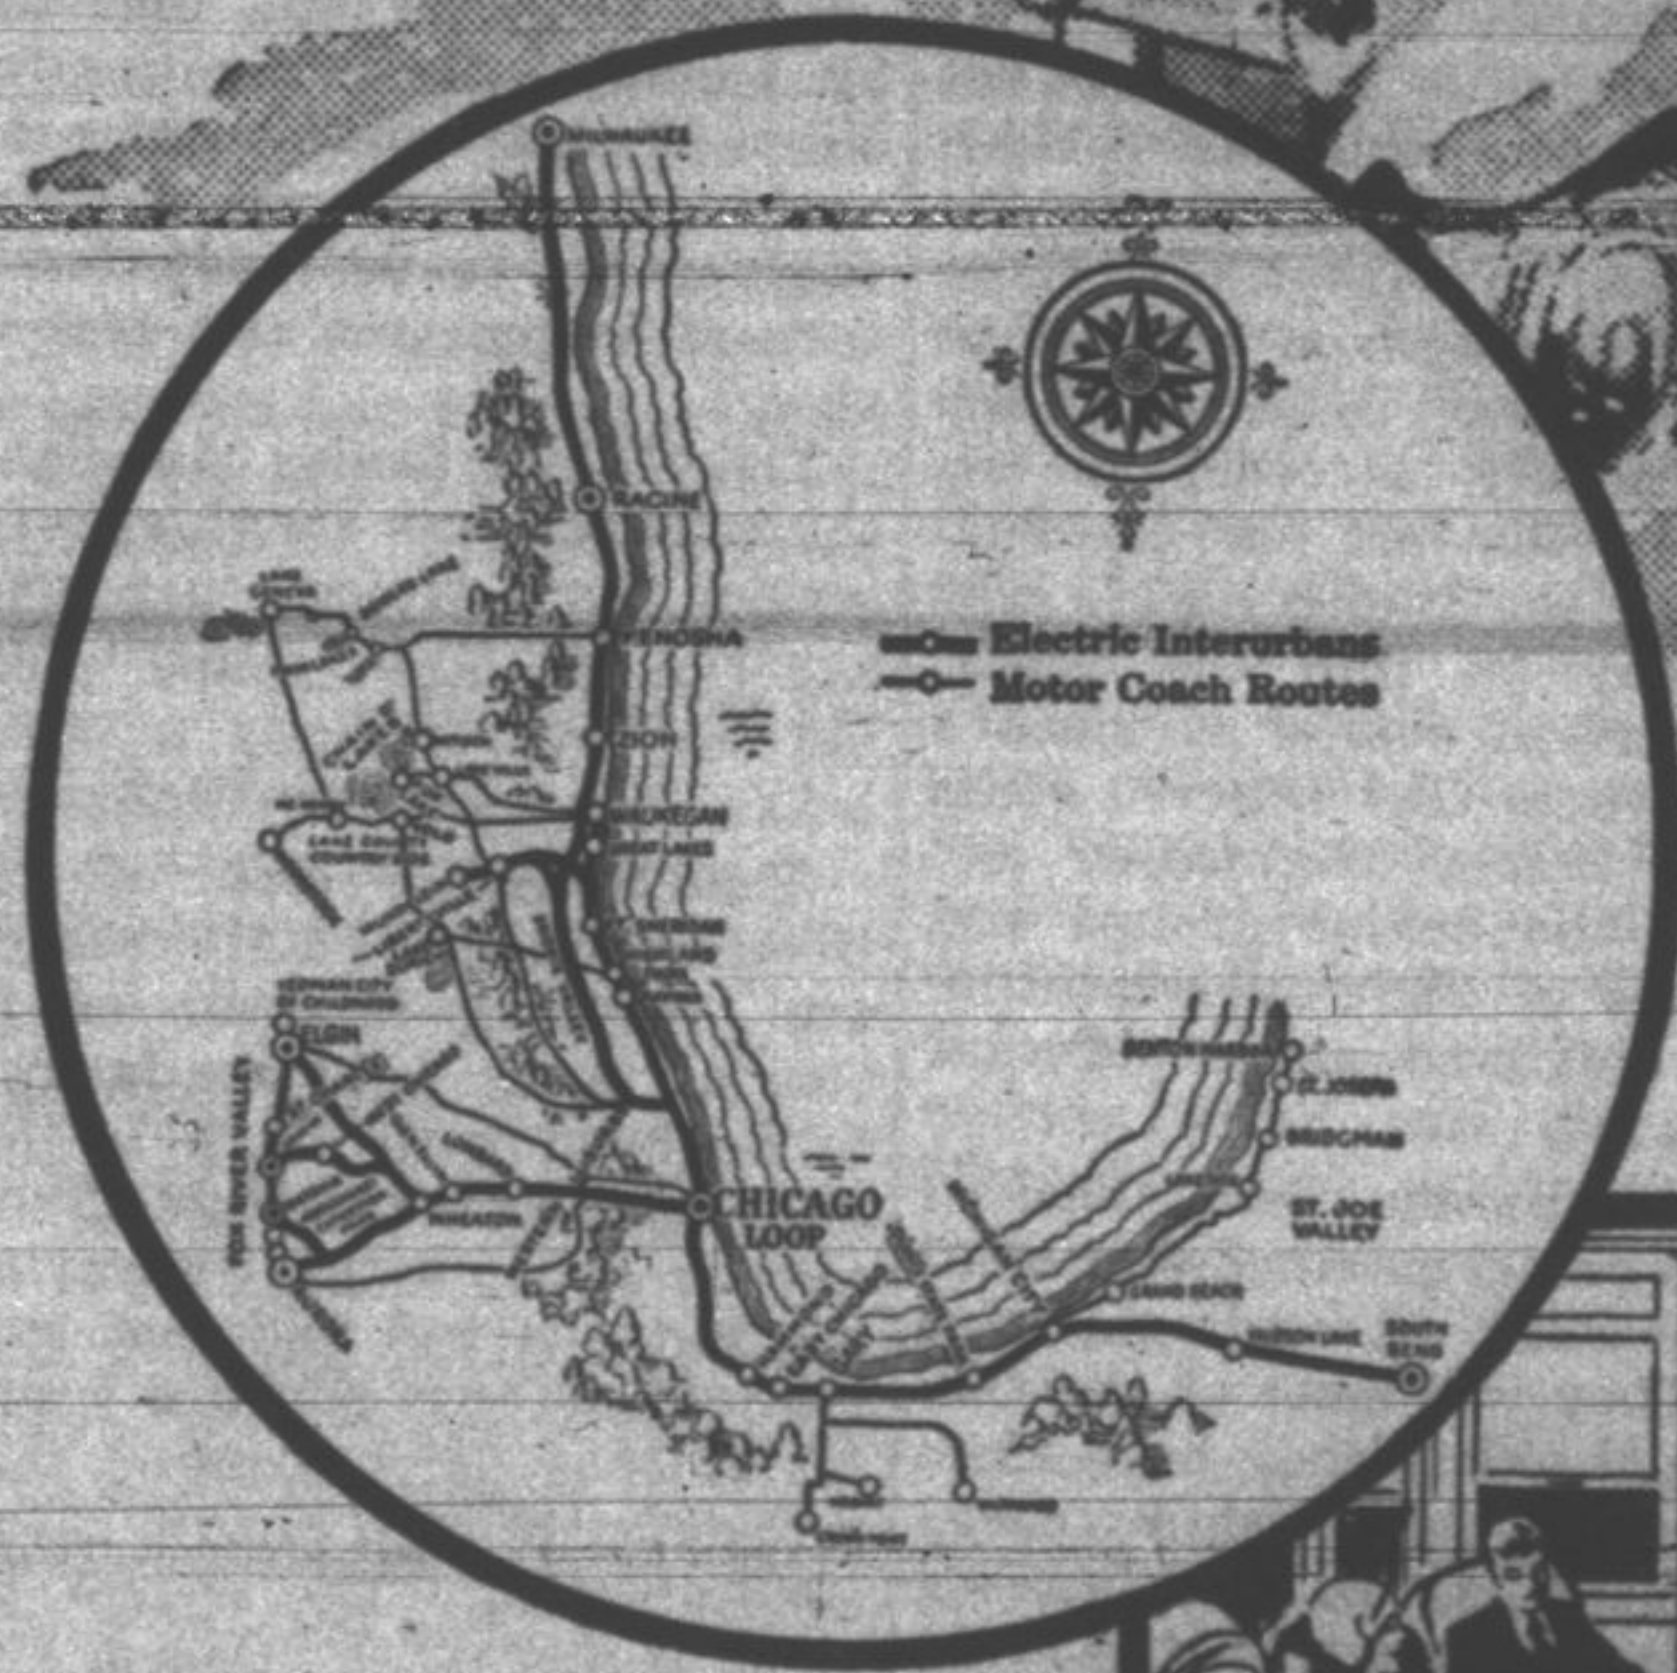

A building in Terre Haute, 103 years old, was torn down recently to make way for a filling station. Which naturally leads to the speculation of what they will be building in place of gas stations 103 years from now.

The most optimistic person we know of is the Countess Ida Von Claussen who thinks that if she had been in the United States last November, Al Smith would have been elected President.

According to scientists, discoveries in Egypt prove that the flapper's rouge and lipstick are six thousand years old. But we still maintain that the rumble seat is a modern invention.
