Francine Larrimore in "Let Us Be Gay" Is Big Hit; Studebaker Theatre

That the spoken drama is still able to stand its ground against talking pictures and other forms of invasion in the amusement field is shown by the great success of Francine Larrimore in "Let Us Be Gay," at the Studebaker theatre, Chicago. Not since the record-breaking engagements of "Abie's Irish Rose" and "What Price Glory" has this historic playhouse held such large, enthusiastic audiences.

"Let Us Be Gay" was an outstanding hit in New York all last year and it has been sent to Chicago with the complete original cast. Produced by John Golden, who sponsored "Lightnin'," "Seventh Heaven," "Turn to the Right," and other famous successes, it combines the crisp, wholesome American humor of those plays with the silky romance which has characterized the work of Rachel Crothers as a playwright. Since she ceased teaching Sunday school in Bloomington, Illinois, her girlhood home, Miss Crothers has won fame and fortune with "39 East," "Nice People," "A Little Journey" and other famous successes.

The combined talents of Miss Larrimore, Miss Crothers and Mr. Golden have registered a wholesome, warm-hearted and well-acted play of the sort that everybody, regardless of their fondness for pictures and vaudeville, will go a few times each season to see. The theatre has a large capacity, and good balcony seats are always available at the lower prices. Mail orders receive careful attention.

Waukegan's first free labor employment bureau, maintained by the Illinois Department of Labor, opened its doors to the public at 129 Lake street last week.
