HUGE PUBLIC LANDS AREA HELD BY U. S.

Many Hundreds of Thousands of Square Miles Still Under Federal Control

A fact not appreciated by one American in ten is that the federal government still controls an area of many hundreds of square miles in public lands, comprising an undefined "forty-ninth state" as large as Texas and a half dozen small eastern states combined. But this "forty-ninth state" will occupy public attention soon for it is President Hoover's policy to transfer control of the vast area from the federal government to the separate governments of the states in which the lands are located. Secretary of the Interior Wilbur, in an article written for the Review of Reviews, explains the president's purpose:

Alarming Fact
"The plan and alarming fact is that, owing to many factors including division of authority between state and federal governments, the 20 years since the public land report under Roosevelt has shown persistent deterioration of these lands," he says. "There is more likelihood that real conservation and protection will result from local control and local management."

Although most of these public domains, located in eleven far western states, are composed of the mountain ranges and desert lands, it does not follow that they are waste lands; on the contrary they are of increasing importance, says Secretary Wilbur.

The agricultural and grazing lands of the valleys depend almost entirely on the mountain water sheds for their water supply, he points out, while mining, grazing and foresting operations on the mountains have already threatened to destroy this supply in some sections. State control of such lands would enable each state to achieve a balance between its agricultural and mining and foresting interests, which would solve the problem, he believes.

Present Statement
Also, so long as the lands remain under federal control the states will take no steps to develop them as public parks and reservations. "Recreation has become of outstanding significance in the life of the nation," he says. "The mountains, forest and desert and the great open places for recreation. But recreation must be based on the proper conservation of the natural conditions prevailing in these regions."

States containing the greatest areas in public lands, with their areas in acreage, are: Arizona 9,473,000; California 14,662,000; Colorado 6,907,000; Idaho 8,812,000; Montana 6,930,000; Nevada 31,449,000; New Mexico 15,615,000; Oregon 13,331,000; Washington 861,000.

What Census Takers in This District Are to Ask About Is Outlined

Unlike the first census ever taken in the United States, in which the government simply sought out the number of people, the 1930 canvass will cover population, unemployment, agriculture, irrigation, drainage, manufacturing, mining, and distribution of the people, according to Mrs. Estelle Northam, supervisor in the third district, which includes Lake county. Even a radio census will be taken so that the potential audience of the air can be computed.

More than 100,000 people will be needed in the army of enumerators, she pointed out, and they will work under 574 supervisors. The city of New York will need approximately 4,200 enumerators.

The enumerators will be paid on the basis of the number of persons and farms counted, so much per person and so much per farm, she explained. In the 1920 census four cents was paid per person and 30 cents per farm.

Need Much Information
The ages, place of birth, employment, and education of a person is needed, as well as the ownership of the home.

The schedule that must be filled out for a farmer is almost terrifying. It records all the crops, the amounts raised, as well as all livestock, equipment, acreage, taxes, crop rotation, poultry, bees and ownership. This is taken, it was pointed out, to aid the government in farm problems.

A city enumerator should finish the work in two weeks and one in rural districts in a month, the government has concluded.

In order to get this information it has been found necessary by the Bureau of Census to keep these facts strictly a secret. None of the information ever is used for the purpose of investigating individual income tax returns, or state, county tax assessments, it is pointed out.

Illinois Fruit Crop Is Damaged by Severe Cold

Sub-zero temperatures, Gov. Louis L. Emmerson was informed today, by the department of agriculture, virtually have ruined Illinois' prospects for a fruit crop this year.

The department based its conclusions on a survey of the peach belt by Joe W. Cummins, chief fruit inspector, for Director Clarence F. Buck.

While the department hesitated to fix the amount of the loss in dollars and cents, it pointed out that the peach growers of the state received approximately $1,800,000 gross, for the 1929 crop. Last year's crop was exceptionally heavy, but the price was low.

Fear was also expressed by the department of agriculture that the extreme cold weather has killed some of last year's growth of peach trees, and reduced the apple crop prospects in certain sections. Temperatures ranged from minimums of 15 to 24 below zero.

In some instances, farm advisers estimated that eighty per cent of the peach buds have been killed.
