Come Up

On the Hill

IF YOU and one of our officers could go up a hill at the outskirts of town and look over it—see the butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker who come into the bank every day with their problems and their trade information; if we could see the other cities from which business and business information daily comes into the bank; if we only could from this hill see the stream of facts and problems coming in, you would understand why a banker's judgment and experience is often so helpful to his clients.

He has an outside point of view, wide business contacts and daily practice in applying this knowledge. Any skill or judgment which we have here is always at your service. Come in.
