Little Boy Killed by Auto in Crossing Road to Pick Wild Flowers

A five-year-old boy who wanted to pick some flowers to take home with him to Chicago last week was killed as he started to cross Rand road, about two miles south of Lake Zurich, and was struck by a motorist.

Hugo Piper of 5955 Waveland avenue, Chicago, his wife and two children left Chicago Wednesday to spend the day in Lake county. The family was headed for Lake Zurich and as their automobile was traveling along Rand road the children noticed some flowers. Piper stopped his automobile on the side of the road and the family got out.

Little Edmund saw some flowers on the opposite side of the road that he wanted to pick. He left his mother and father and started to cross the road. Edmund got part of the way across when he was struck by an automobile owned by Dennis Naughton of Chicago, according to Deputies George Heckinger and Frank Suhodnik.

The little boy was put into an automobile and started for the hospital, but he died before the hospital was reached.

Mongolian Dog Fur Is Gaining in Popularity

The lowly Mongolian dog, once as unpopular as the American cur, has become a fur-bearing animal of importance.

With markets opening up in both Europe and the United States, raising dogs in Mongolia for their fur has become an established business and many have grown rich at it.

Even the Mongols, despite their belief that it is a sin to kill a dog, could not stand the temptation when the price rose to $15.

Many sold their dogs alive. Others forgot their religion for the time and killed and skinned the animals themselves. The hundreds of stray dogs in Kailar and surrounding cities disappeared and the supply soon became less than the demand.

Approximately 10,000 pelts are sold out of the country each year. The pure Mongolian dog skin seems to be the most appreciated by traders abroad and has always been in good demand. This pelt possess rich, black hair and is often confused with bear-skin.
