WHAT IS THE DIFFERENCE IN DRY CLEANING?

All dry-cleaning is the same principle. The different processes you see advertised are not differences in dry cleaning—but merely different methods of recovering and purifying the solvent.

For the solvent used in dry cleaning (which is something between kerosene and gasoline) must be used over and over, otherwise, the cost would be prohibitive.

It takes a lot of money to install the kind of equipment that will remove from the solvent all the dirt, the suspended matter, the "worn-out" soap, the mineral oils that come from garments, and the water that might cause shrinkage.

To be sure that your goods are dry cleaned in a solvent that is pure, crystal clean, sanitary, and that they are properly rinsed, it is necessary to pay a fair price—a price that permits the dry cleaning plant to install and operate modern equipment instead of "getting by."

We believe that the public does not want "cheap" cleaning but good dry cleaning done in the best possible way, under proper conditions—and that they prefer to pay a fair and reasonable price to a reliable firm for this assurance.
