

GAME ENDANGERED BY AIR TRANSPORT

Sportsmen Fear Transport by Plane to Hunting Grounds Menaces Wild Life

Air transport is a new and dangerous menace to game. While it is unlawful nearly everywhere to hunt from an airplane, transportation to and from hunting fields by air is coming more and more into favor with sportsmen.

While air travel by sportsmen can not be criticized as unethical the fact remains that it increases the hazard to game, will increase the kill and is just one more obstacle to the maintenance of a supply of wild life.

Air transport companies are advertising that the new mode of travel "saves time," "saves expense," "saves labor," and puts one quickly and easily into game haunts inaccessible to pack train or canoe.

"While there are now thrills to be experienced in soaring over forests and lakelands seeking virgin game-lands," says Carlos Avery, president of the American Game Protective association, "much of the romance and joy of the time honored and more primitive methods of travel by pack train, on foot and by canoe are lost. Many a veteran sportman and explorer will be reluctant to abandon the forest trail for the paths of the air. A great part of the satisfaction of a hunting trip comes from the experiences of camp and trail."

"Much of the benefit from hunting comes from the physical exertion required. To the seasoned outdoor man a hunting trip made easy and luxurious loses its zest and degenerates into a mere meat hunting expedition."

Waukegan House Which Sheltered Lincoln Is Reported Sold Recently

One of the most historical homesteads in the county, the one in which Abraham Lincoln was lodged in Waukegan for a night's rest in 1859, today was sold to Chauncey J. Jones of 215 Julian street, pioneer banker of Lake county, who had much to do with the establishment of the First National bank in that city.

Mr. Jones completed the purchase of the late Leon A. Prentice home, at the corner of Julian street and County street, for a consideration said to be in the neighborhood of $40,000.

"Yes, there is a deal pending there. I haven't title to the property but I believe that the sale will go through. I do not care to state the amount of the consideration," Mr. Jones said.

Mr. Jones has lived at 215 Julian street for the last 36 years and while he is reluctant to leave his home he has yearned for years to reside in the beautiful Prentice homestead across the street that is reported to have one of the most beautiful lawns along the North Shore.

The staid old white homestead, smacking of Civil war days, has the distinctive beauty of the old fashioned home that carries a note of pleasantness that architects still copy to a large extent.
