FIELD MUSEUM GETS CHINESE PAINTING

Rare Old Pictures of Cock Fight Dating Back to 12th Century Received

A rare old Chinese painting representing a cockfight—one of the favorite sports in the Orient at least as far back as the sixth century B. C. has been presented to Field Museum of Natural History by the American Friends of China, Chicago. The painting, executed in delicate colors on an ancient much-worn silk, had been kept for centuries in a private collection in Japan. It is attributed to Li An-chung, an artist of the Sung period, who lived in the twelfth century, according to Dr. Berthold Laufer, curator of anthropology. It bears the earmarks of this period in drawing, style and color.

"Fixer" a Feature

That the horse race and dog race track "fixer" of ill fame in modern times had a prototype in ancient China is indicated by the painting. Some forty-six men are depicted grouped around the cockpit. One of the combatant roosters is seeking safety in flight while the other eagerly pursues him. The attention of the crowd, however, is not contracted on the contest. Instead their heads are turned upward, watching a bird in the air which has just been hit by an arrow, discharged by a dignified official. He seems to be the umpire of the cockfight and also the owner of the cowardly rooster, and has taken this means of distracting the attention of the spectators from the struggle until he can remedy the situation for his winged gladiator.

Favorite Pastime

"Cocking was a favorite pastime of many emperors and idle youths in ancient China," says Dr. Laufer, "in like manner, the sport was cultivated in ancient Cambodia, Java, Sumatra, India, Persia, Greece and Rome. In all these countries cockfights were conducted merely as a popular amusement accompanied by heavy betting. The originators of cockfights were probably the Malaysians. In the beginning the game was connected with Malayan religious ideas. The fighting roosters represented village and tribal communities and their chiefs. The cocks were regarded as devine, and their contest was an ordeal which decided the superiority of a community."

Total Enrollment at High School Is 1,268

This year's total enrollment at Deerfield-Shields high has reached the figure of 1268, an increase of 165 over last year.

Eleven of these students are apprentices in the vocational department, reporting to Mr. Davitt for drawing and mathematics, to Miss Beckmire for English and social science, and to Mr. Durbahn for carpentry.

"This is the smallest apprentice enrollment we have ever had," said Mr. Durbahn, "due to building conditions in this county and others."

One more apprentice is expected, which will make the total number 12.
