Motor Hints

Among the most important aids to starting motors in cold weather are the correct fuel and lubricant, points out the mechanical first aid department of the Chicago Motor club in a bulletin on the care of the car in the winter.

Various grades of gasoline differ greatly, so far as easy starting qualities are concerned, the bulletin stated. It was suggested that car owners who anticipate trouble in starting, use only those grades of gasoline which possess easy-starting qualities. Frequently it is advisable to readjust the carburetor. This should be done only by a capable mechanic.

Ready to Advise

The agency of the make of the car is always in a position to advise owners as to the best oil. Some cars use the same consistency of oil the year around; most, however, are designed for thinner lubricant in winter. Honest and to the minute filling stations usually offer the right grade of oil for the car in question; the Chicago Motor club does not, however, advise motorists to trust all stations to recommend the correct oil. The reason that a comparatively thin oil is better in winter is because oil thickens in low temperatures; frequently the "drag" of the pistons against the cylinder walls and other sources of friction cause an excessive load on the starter if the oil is too thick or too cold.

The choke should be used sparingly. Excessive use of this aid in starting will result in undue amounts of raw gasoline being drawn into the cylinders, and a certain amount, depending upon the efficiency of the piston rings, will leak past the pistons into the crank case, thereby diluting the crank case oil.

Use of Crank

Whenever the starter encounters difficulty in spinning the engine because of cold oil, the crank should be used to loosen the engine. This practice will save the battery from undue drain.

Many car manufacturers advise a lighter lubricant in the gear case, and also in the differential housing. Ascertain from the agency handling the car what grade of oil or grease is best in those parts, and act accordingly.

Democratic Rally Held Tuesday Evening

Large attendance marked the Democratic rally held Tuesday evening in the Highland Park Woman's club, and a number of state and county candidates were present. Speakers announced were John E. Hesse, candidate for congress in this district, Judge C. N. Goodwin, Hon. Thomas Donovan, chairman of the state central committee and Judge W. H. Dieterich, candidate for congressman at large. The audience heard also from several of the county candidates, and the meeting was considered a very successful one.

Help the Unemployed by Giving Them Jobs, Timely Letter Urges

are millions of homes in this country needing a few hours' work. And that work when distributed to our idle, needy workmen will keep thousands of families through the last phase of this economic depression.

"Let's call in the plumber, painter, furnace man, builder, carpenter, and put him to work now.

"It occurs to me that the thought, if given publicity, may find many home owners receptive—no one of whom can do much but many can do a little, which in the aggregate would amount to a great deal.

Sincerely and cordially,
W. D. McDonald."

A Penny a Person and the Brooklyn Bridge

"Did you ever stop to think of the enormous fund one could acquire in a short time if he could stand on the Brooklyn Bridge and obtain a penny from every person who walked across it? Think of the thousands of people that walk over it every day in the year!

"Strange as it may seem, a strong parallel exists in the unemployment situation today.

"There are thousands of people without work and thousands of American homes full of figurative "pennies." A comparative few of these "pennies" translated into small jobs around the house can be of inestimable value to the unemployed in Highland Park.

Advantage

And what serves, my boy, the most tangible help,
While toiling along o'er life's long winding road?
So you think that the riches that some lucky whelp
May inherit, will lift from his shoulders the load
Each pilgrim must carry,—which thereby insures
The happiness here, that abides and endures?

Don't fancy that rank and position in life
Will lift you above all the toil and the greed
That fate has decreed for this cauldron of strife;
Or that luck will assist you to leave far behind
In the race, which is free and is open to all
Your fellows, who enter and heed Fortunes call!

No, my boy, remember that letters exist;
That laurels are earned by the brawn that has won!
The badge of success is for those who resist
Temptations that hamper—whose work is well done!
If advantage obtains, be you sure of this truth—
That Poverty aids, more than Riches, in youth!
