BOY SCOUTS AND THE RED CROSS

Every disaster strikes in some way peculiarly different from the one that has gone before. Each presents a new phase of emergency relief work. The American Red Cross, in the half century since it was first incorporated for relief in distress, has striven to perfect its relief plans into such mobility that it can always meet a given situation.

The Boy Scouts of America, noted for their devotion to service, and their great versatility in training to meet emergencies, have been of great assistance on many scenes of disaster, to the Red Cross relief forces.

They have served as messengers, they have at times assisted the police authorities in the direction of traffic, and they have been helpful in the canteen. Their training in Red Cross First Aid and Life Saving has been of great value in these emergencies. Thousands of Boy Scouts have lent a helping hand in the dark hours of storm or flood and have helped greatly in relieving distress and grief.

To them all praise is due, and the Red Cross hopes that it may always count on their help in the future.—James L. Fieser, acting chairman, American Red Cross.

Two Bandits Hold Up Young Man in Car Here

Two bandits held up Lawrence Flodstrom Thursday night of last week and took his hat, camel's hair overcoat, gloves, necktie, watch, fountain pen, silver pencil and $60.

Flodstrom, who lives at 371 Laurel avenue, Highland Park, was sitting with a young woman in a car parked in front of the home of Edmund D. Brigham, 250 Central avenue, when the bandits appeared. The girl was not molested.
